NATURAL ❤ SELECTION

Like thousands of other happy couples, Kimberly Clayton and Kent Kellough found each other easily and naturally, through Great Expectations. Here is their story.

Q. "And what was the advantage of joining Great Expectations?"

A. "Members of Great Expectations know what they want. They don't play games. My first date with Kent was very comfortable, which was a rare first date experience."

Q. "Kent, what do you tell people about Great Expectations?"

A. "It absolutely works. It's not just for people who are looking for dates, it's also for people who have plenty of dates who aren't finding the right person."

OUTA-MY-HEAD PRODUCTIONS - THE FIRM®

WANTED:

Men with overwhelming memories of a traumatic experience.

The Trauma Clinic at the Massachusetts General Hospital is studying an FDA approved medication which helps people who find it difficult to put traumatic events out of their minds. Eligible volunteers will be treated for 13 weeks, free of charge, with either a placebo or medication. If you are interested, please complete the following checklist:

- ❑ I have nightmares about and flashbacks to the events
- ❑ I have a difficult time putting the events out of my mind
- ❑ I am often irritable and I startle very easily
- ❑ I am afraid much of the time
- ❑ I do not get pleasure out of the things I used to enjoy
- ❑ I feel distant and cut off from others
- ❑ I have trouble with anger

If you have checked three or more, please call the Trauma Clinic at:

617-727-5500 ext 946

And ask for Mike.

AIDS and Comfort

The worthiest of causes (fund-raising for pediatric AIDS) is benefited by every purchase of this very engaging tape put out by Disney called "For Our Children." On it, mostly (but not exclusively) children's songs are sung by famous rockers usually known for rocking in the adult direction, hence they are familiar, slick and lively - and what is in some cases their "sexiness," is harnessed for the occasion to come across more in a spirit of friskiness. Little Richard felicitously cranks up "Itsy Bitsy Spider" into something full of merry mischief and chugging energy. A rather shaggy and hangdog Bob Dylan sings an appealing "This Old Man" and Bette Midler provides an upbeat "Blueberry Pie." There's also a melodic and singable version of that old childhood chestnut, "The Ballad Of Davy Crockett." The quieter Side Two has lullabies, soft romantic numbers equally applicable to the romance of childhood ("Good Night My Love," by Paula Abdul) and the wistful Beatles song "Once There Was A Way To Get Back Homeward" sung here by Jackson Browne. Jennifer Warnes alludes indirectly - laced as it is with sadness and regret - to the disease that occasions this tape. Along with being a wonderful tape for children and their parents to listen to together, it can also serve as a springboard for discussing this tragic illness. The liner notes remind us that research for children's AIDS is conducted and funded separately from the adult form of the disease. Costs $11.50.

Quick Jeeves! My Miraculous Tarnish - Lifter

The great impediment to having silver (apart from plain not being able to afford it!) is having to shine it, at least unless that housekeeping chore is oddly pleasing to you. An easier and far more magical method of cleaning silver that accomplishes much of - sometimes all of - and sometimes even more than regular polishing with a pinky paste, is this thing called "Qwicksilver." It consists of an electrolytic cleaning plate - flat, with Swiss cheese holes on it. The silver is placed either directly on the plate in a basin of boiling water, made frisky with some true-blue, old-fashioned Arm and Hammer Super Washing Soda or, the piece of silver can merely touch some other piece of silver that is touching the plate - rather like a human chain of hand-holding people (the last of whom is holding hands with the Deity). After a brief silver-washing bath (it's the electrolytic action that removes the tarnish in about 30 seconds) and some mild toweling off, the silver looks more whitely-silver than before, cleaner in a whole new way - and beautiful. The plate will last a lifetime, magically enticing the tarnish off silver. As if an invisible soft toothbrush had laboriously scrubbed it, the un-polishable dirt on a crunchy ornate Victorian piece treated with Qwicksilver showed its details in clean relief for the very first time. Qwicksilver is used in British museums. Costs $23 by mail order.

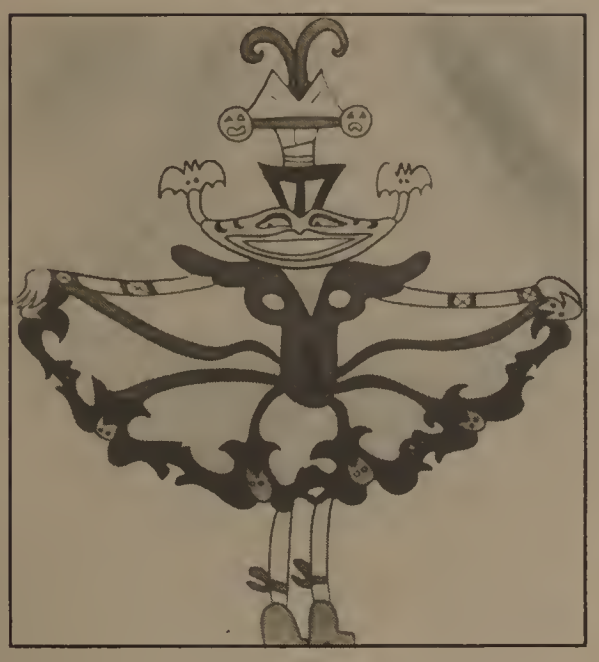
Tabby's In Therapy



Answering its own question in the affirmative, Do Cats Needs Shrinks?, Peter Neville's chatty-sympathetic book about cats takes on the Big Issues (feline-wise), often suggesting specific therapeutic interventions. There's aggression in its many forms: "Spraying and Other Nasty Markings"; "Stress and Trauma" (including projectile vomiting); "Bonding Problems"; "Despotism"; "Husband Phobia"; "Strange Diets and Bizarre Behavior" - including plant-eating, sexual problems and "An Alcoholic." "Quite what to do about a client's cat with a passion for Campari and soda was a little more difficult. Gradual withdrawal of access to alcohol was advised as a slow drying-out program for Slosher, who had been used to a daily drink for over three years. I also advised that the soda level be raised at the expense of the Campari and hoped that cold turkey would not set in."

Neville uses an answering-letters format, in which he gives treatment recommendations intertwined with fascinating background information. And, being English, he has that wonderfully brisk, semi-sarcastic tone: To the owner of aggressive cat Arthur, he says: "So, Maureen, I'm afraid that we are rather up against that uncompromising 13 million years of evolution since the first cat walked the earth in trying to reform Arthur's murderous habits." Cats named Lurk Tyrson, Ali, Snowflake - and even a dog-flasher nicknamed Pencil - traipse through the book as examples, sometimes raising their hackles and dancing sideways in the jungle of their living rooms. Neville's typical therapies include loving quarantines, outdoor strolls in harnesses, milieu readjustments, and even Valium and flower remedies.

Do Cats Need Shrinks? by Peter Neville, $7.95, Paperback.

AROUND TOWN

Get ready, o' weary subway riders. On Sunday, October 4, taking the T - the red line at least - will have a whole new aura. The US of A's oldest transit system will team up with flagship public television and radio stations for the "WGBH T Party." Take the term "underground music" literally this Sunday; the festival will include local musicians, crafts, food, magicians and more. Make plans for this unique festival which, among other things, marks the 80th anniversary of subway service between Cambridge and Boston. Can you imagine walking over the Mass. Ave. bridge everyday? OUCH. For more information, call 722-3302 or 492-2777 x3881.

At the Somerville theater (55 Davis Square) October 2-22, The Best of the International Tournee of Animation will show 17 animated short films from the U.S. and Europe. Mellow Madness Productions, in association with Expanded Entertainment, have put together quite a fest, featuring humorous stories, films prominently featuring music and some spotlighting unusual animation techniques. Check out these Oscar winners: The Fly, Creature Comforts and Balance. Lots of regular showtimes. Plus, films of a vulgar, raunchy and generally socially nonredeeming nature will be screened at midnight Fridays and Saturdays. Call 625-6245 for more information.

Feeling worn down and perhaps a bit aesthetically numb? Time for some culture? For classical music, you can't get much better than the Bank of Boston Celebrity Series 1992-93 season opener, a concert by pianist Emanuel Ax and cellist Yo-Yo Ma. Both musicians are acclaimed soloists in the US and internationally, and their collaboration promises to be truly supreme. The program includes pieces by Debussy, Mendelssohn, Brahms and Webern. Remaining tickets for the Ax/ Ma recital are $30 and are on sale at the Symphony Hall box office (266-14920 or charge them (266-1200).

The 25th anniversary of the first network broadcast of Star Trek is coming up, and The Museum of Science will host the traveling exhibition, Star Trek: Federation Science October 3 - January 3. Check this out: 12000 sq. feet, 30 modular displays, an accompanying show in the Hayden Planetarium and a Star Trek shop featuring hard-to-find memorabilia. Visitors can navigate through an asteroid field, turn into a Klingon, visually "beam down" to an alien planet and command a starship. Representations of the "Bridge," "Engineering," "Sick Bay" (dammit Bones!) and the "Transporter Room" will also be there to enjoy. Advance tickets are required. Purchase at least a day before by MC or Visa: 723-2506.

If you loved your rubber duck as much as Ernie did or your kids do now, you'll want to be on the Charles by the Hatch Shell on October 4 from 12-3 pm for the United Cerebral Palsy's 4th Annual Great Rubber Duckie Race. The afternoon will have food(young, starving Bostonians never pass up free food), games, entertainers and live music, such as the New New Orleans Jazz Band. Most importantly though, about 5000 duckies will be launched into the Charles at 2pm (rain or shine), and for a $5 donation, YOU can sponsor one. No laughing - the first 50 to cross the finish line win prizes, like a Volkswagen Fox. Call 926-5480 for more information.

5 Dive Bars

Boston is a city not only rich in history and culture, but one blessed with establishments catering to the non-conformist, the frugal, the lonely and sometimes the underground thrill-seeker. Join the characters that light up the city's darkest, dankest and grungiest of establishments in The Dive Bar.

BY KATHY MATHESON

During these recessionary times, it's easy to understand why people rent movies for $3 instead of paying $7 to see one in a theater; and now that there is a 24-hour stand-up comedy channel available on Cable TV, the same logic can apply: Why would anyone bother paying to see someone in a club when they can watch comedians for free from the comfort of their own sofabed?

Well, comedy clubs have reacted to what some consider a glut of performers by diversifying their formats. "It was stretching the concept to have [only stand-up comics] five nights a week," explained general manager of Catch a Rising Star, Tony V. "There aren't that many comedy customers."

Now, Catch A Rising Star in Harvard Square has the "Wheelers and Dealers" comedy/music/variety show every Wednesday night beginning at 8:30pm. In addition to stand-up comics and a comedy troupe, you will be entertained by the Wheelers and Dealers, who play country-rock parodies. (Incidentally, members of the W & D include some of Boston's best session musicians.)

In addition to playing some Weird Al Yankovic-type satires, the W & D "do songs that you might think were regular country songs until you start listening to the lyrics," explained Tony V. "It's definitely very interesting." Since the concept is still new, he said some nights are more successful than others - one night, Steven Wright came and sang with the W & D.

Every Monday, Catch features appearances by sketch comedy troupes such as Mass Hysteria, Heavily Medicated Faerie Tales and The Other White Meat.

"People are just getting burned out on stand-up," explained Scott Stiffler, a member of The Other White Meat. "[Sketch comedy] doesn't have the traditional set-up-and-punchline structure that stand-up does." Some sketch troupes perform funny, unrelated sketches, but TOWM uses recurring characters put into different situations, explained Stiffler, comparing it to the old TV show SCTV.

Stitches, located just outside Kenmore Square on Beacon Street, regularly features two out-of-the-ordinary comedy acts: Frank "The 'R'-Rated Hypnotist" Santos and Cross Comedy. Every Tuesday at 9pm, Santos entertains and hypnotizes members of the audience. The "R"-rating is there because Santos uses hypnotism to allow audience members to forget little things - like their last names, and the fact that they're wearing clothes.

On Thursdays at Stitches, you can come see Cross Comedy, a troupe that is billed as giving the audience the experience of "being backstage, onstage and in the audience all at the same time." Sort of like a mini-Saturday Night Live show, a Cross Comedy presentation is comprised of skits, taped video pieces, satires and a little bit of stand-up.

Finally, if you're into spontaneity, the comedy-improvisation troupes Guilty Children and ImprovBoston perform every Friday and Saturday, respectively, at the Back Alley Theatre in Inman Square, Cambridge.

So what are you waiting for? Turn off the TV and get up from that sofabed - there's innovative comedy to be seen! As one sketch group's promo material reads, "Enjoy us now for cheap before we become famous pigs!" ❑

Improper Establishments: Boston's Dive Bars

TAKE THE DIVE

by David A. Oakley

Angela Woolridge

Boasting "Ambience" and a capacity of 37, The Littlest Bar is in a category unto itself.

The Dive Bar.

For those unfamiliar to this staple, a dive bar could mistakenly be defined as a place frequented—or more appropriately "inhabited"—by alcoholics and society's undesirables - certainly not a place to indulge in intellectual conversation or broaden one's social positioning. We'll leave that to bars which offer substantially more than a stool, a jukebox and one bathroom. But any creature of the night wanting nothing more than this, can have his or her choice of establishments. Places full of character, rich in conversation and a true cross-section of America's middle classes.

Visualizing the dive bar is easy.

From the outside, you see a small, square-shaped building. A Schaeffer Beer sign forgotten from the '70s hangs over the door which opens into an equally small bar room. Behind the bar is an older, burly-looking bartender with "Surly" tattooed on his forehead. Behind him are dusty bottles of liquor, boxes with a choice of a half dozen flavors of Beef Jerky and Slim Jims and a heated hot dog roller forever turning ten-day-old wieners. Standing at the bar are a dozen characters; some are city workers, some unemployed, some have questionable circumstances and almost all possess the evil eye (the "eye" is the stare a stranger receives after walking into one of these joints). Hang out in one of these places long enough and you'll develop the "eye" yourself.

Lots of Boston bars offer the opportunity to receive this friendly greeting and allow you to experience the alternative bar atmosphere. But before choosing your dive, understand that even dive bars boast varying levels of class distinction. There seem to be three types of dives: The yuppie dive (currently a trendy opportunity for yuppies who seek bonding opportunities with real Americas); the college dive (most college bars are indeed dives) and the traditional dive. Almost all forms of The Dive offer cheap drinks or drink specials, so printing drink prices here would be nothing but a waste of space. They're all cheap!

The Traditional Dive

Even with all of its negative connotations and reputation as an unsanitary drinking environment, the traditional dive has managed to attract a more diverse clientele, today. Make no mistake about it: traditional dives abound in the area.

Take, for instance, Costello's Bar in Waltham. A place described by 54 year-old Jim Parsons as "a place where you can take out your teeth and soak them while you drink," Costello's is the stereotype of The Dive. Boasting a jukebox, a pool table and two televisions which according to regular John Melchin, "simultaneously play the Red Sox and I Dream of Jeannie," this watering hole represents it all. This "dark, smoky gin mill" features cheap beers, neighborhood regulars and plenty of smokers. Melchin, who's a sales executive for a local company, says he frequents Costello's "to put on a different persona and to indulge in a different lifestyle." He claims that he comes here "in the same fashion as someone who can't afford to dine at Lockober's will go there for dinner. And besides, the beer here is cheap."

Another establishment one could consider in its Dive Bar category is The Littlest Bar on Province Street in Boston.

With a capacity of 37 people, this place mixes locals with British and Scottish tourists and is almost always filled with smoke. This joint is a classic. Cheap beers (stored under the front window) and Guinness on draft make The Littlest Bar a requirement for anyone mapping out a dive bar tour.

For those more daring and willing to sample the seedier side of life, try Sullivan's Tap on Canal Street - just across from North Station. If you dare to go in, you might find that the regulars (some are sober) may even acknowledge your presence. The night I visited, an older gentlemen resembling a slimmer Tip O'Neill befriended me and bought me a beer as a reward for a joke made about a planned early departure from this joint. Which brings up another point to be made about The Dive.

What motivates someone to go to a Dive? According to grad student Paul Corcoran, "I prefer dives mainly because they're not pretentious. Most of my friends don't want to go out if I say 'let's just hit a dive' because they're either afraid that they'll get beaten up or - more likely - depressed." While dive bars don't claim real cheery atmospheres, they are a place to let it all hang out.

Joe Marsolin is one guy determined to avoid yuppie joints at all costs. "It's more money, the drinks are weaker and women won't even give you the time of day." Once an accountant, Marsolin says that he was "caught up" in the trendy scene but never truly felt comfortable. "You'd be surprised at some of the regulars here. Professionals and the like, but please don't tell anyone where you met me. I don't want them flocking to my sanctuary."

One sanctuary that's been around for 57 years is Wortman's Cafe, located on Lewis Street in Lynn. Behind the Schlitz sign that adorns the front of the building is a small bar and eating area which relies on business from regulars - as do most dives. The biggest selling product here is their cheap well whiskey followed by their equally cheap vodka. Open seven days a week (they open at 9 a.m. every day except for Sunday when they open at noon), Wortman's doesn't see a lot of new faces come through their door. One of their daytime bartender's mentioned that the reason I was given "the eye" as we entered was because "no one here has seen you before." This comment wasn't as unsettling as the feeling I got from the pickled Kielbasa and pickled eggs (they go through a jar of each a week). When asked whether he had sampled a pickled egg before, one regular commented in disbelief, "Of course I have."

The College Dive

When it comes to college dives (they deserve prominence over yuppie dives since students need these bars. Yuppies don't.), students in the city usually go for a limited number of places.

First, there is the chain of Father's bars, a mixing ground for students, bikers and rockers. Located in Brookline, Allston and Cambridge, Father's offers cheap beer and a Fellini-esque collection of characters. Nothing too noteworthy.

When not frequenting the Crossroads—a B.U. hangout on Beacon Street—or Maxwell Jumps on Huntington Avenue, Eric Lindsay says that he prefers Mary Ann's on Beacon Street in Brookline. Several years out of college, Lindsay says Mary Ann's is a favorite because of their boldness in acknowledging their dive-like tendencies. "They proudly display a plaque for a Worst of Boston award, touting themselves as Boston's Worst Bar. They're actually proud of it."

Mary Ann's is indeed one of the seedier college dives whose clientele changes from locals to students as soon as darkness hits, and according to Lindsay, "It's just an awful place. Warm, cheap draughts, the smell of stale beer and haggard patrons mixed with inebriated college students. And don't forget the horrible old drunks."

The Yuppie Dive

The yuppie dive is an enigma. Not too seedy, yet not too classy, the yuppie dive treads a thin line between tacky and dumpy.

Take the Red Hat for instance. This place qualifies as a yuppie dive due to both its physical locale as well as its clientele. After-work drinkers from the state house, as well as Beacon Hill residents come to this Cambridge Street watering hole to meet, drink and enjoy the smelly atmosphere that sits within its wood and brick interior. Drinks are more expensive here than at most other dives but still, they don't challenge a Joe's or a Dad's. In fact, one quality that makes this place a dive is its location "on the hill" without the pretentious customers who are more likely to be found on the other side.

The 7's, on Charles Street, is another, happier dive. A crowd of new-to-the-workforce attitudes mixes quite well with college students and 30-something degenerates. Beers do come in pints but they're cheap and cold. The 7's also cleans their tap lines. Games of darts mix well with the TV and jukebox and no one seems to notice whether or not anyone else is out of place. Matthew Stype, a regular here, says, "To me, it's a great place to have a cold beer on my way home from work and nobody bothers me."

So if you crave privacy and don't want to dress up, drain your wallet or pay a cover, you now know the alternative.

The dive bar is everywhere and waiting to be explored. Just remember: Bring a portable phone (many are phoneless), your weekend's worst look and a growl. Nobody will know the difference. Take the dive ❑

Get Up, Get Out, Get Dirty

New Hampshire Hosts The Mud Sweat And Gears Duathlon

BY ERIC PETERSON

Your mother was right, you know. You should go outside and play. Ride your bike or something. Have a race. And if bike racing brings to mind images of sweaty guys in lycra jerseys riding those euro-style racing bikes with the twisted handlebars and skinny tires, forget it. Like the banana seat, that, too, is ancient history.

Welcome to the nineties and the Age of the Mountain Bike. Mountain bikes (appropriately named for their terrain capabilities), with their fat tires and straight handlebars, are now the most popular bikes in America. More bikes means more people looking for ways to have fun with them, and the newest form of entertainment arrives in New England on October 4.

That's the day Nashua New Hampshire hosts the Mud, Sweat and Gears Mountain Bike Duathlon. Like the triathlon (its sister event), the duathlon is a race combining different physical skills. In this case, a 4k run is followed by a 20k mountain bike leg which is trailed by another 4k run. All of this competition is followed by the racer's/runner's choice of a) a long nap, b) a delicious McDonald's burger or c) a sprint to the nearest bar. Racers may compete on their own or as a member of a two person relay team, with one person doing both runs and one person biking.

If this all sounds a little hardcore, don't be dissuaded by the concept. According to Race Director Mike Dionne, the event is geared towards athletes from novice to moderate experience levels. "You're not going to find the professional mountain bike racers," said Dionne. "We want people to come out and have fun."

While prizes will be given to the winners, the emphasis is on participation. At this point, about 150 athletes are expected to compete. Johanna Clarke, a first time racer, said that she signed up for the race because "I'd done a few road races and this sounded like a fun alternative." This type of race has been held for a number of years in mountain bike meccas like California and Colorado, but this is the first event of its kind in New England.

The course is laid out in Mine Falls Park in Nashua, and is bordered on one side by The Nashua River, and the other by a series of canals. According to Dionne, about 70% of the race runs alongside some water. Unlike some mountain bike races where the woods (and the bugs) are too thick to see, this should be a scenic course. So if you're out of the running for a prize, relax and enjoy the view. The park also provides many spots for spectators to view the race and a large crowd is expected.

The entry fee for the race is $22, but add $6 to that if you're not a member of TriFed, the organization that administers triathlons and other related events. The $6 surcharge gets you a one-day membership so that you can compete. It does not, however, get you the secret decoder ring. For that, you must join for a one-year membership. The entry fee includes a race packet holding various sponsor products and other goodies.

Two neck and neck racers speed towards the finish line.

Racers will also receive a long-sleeve cotton t-shirt with the race logo on either side. But more importantly, all competitors are entitled to a pre- and post-race massage, courtesy of The Center for Physical Therapy and Exercise. Even if you've never had a sports massage, don't feel weird. You'll love it. Especially post-race, when you're trying to remember the part that mentioned "fun." Just don't embarrass yourself and ask for an "Around The World" job.

In addition to massages, staff from the center will also provide medical supervision throughout the race and be available to answer any questions about training, nutrition, and more. Following the race (and your massage if you're smart), there will be food available for all competing athletes. Presumably, the spectators may watch the eating as well.

For more information, or directions on how to find the race, call (603) 891-0844. You may register on race day but get there early, by 7:30 a.m., if you plan to do so. The race begins at 9:30 a.m.

One other great thing about the race: a portion of the proceeds are being donated to the Boy's Club of Nashua. So this year, skip the foliage trip and check out Mud, Sweat and Gears. After all, since your mother was right about getting outside, you may as well do your part and get a little dirty. ❑

Cheers.

DEATH BECOMES HER

"A Black Comedy Full of Twists"

Death Becomes Her is an anomaly among summer releases: this black comedy, starring Bruce Willis, Goldie Hawn and Meryl Streep, is well-written, engaging from first scene to last, wickedly funny, and unlike a score of other summer movies, worth the price of admission. The movie centers on the rivalry between two women, Helen Sharp (Goldie Hawn) and Madeline Ashton (Meryl Streep), as well as on the object of both their affections, Dr. Ernest Menville (Bruce Willis), plastic surgeon. When Helen sees Madeline steal Ernest away, she plots a revenge that goes awry, and the circumstances resulting from the dirty deed are hardly what anyone nursed on Hollywood formulas would expect. There has been a lot of press about Death Becomes Her being a ludicrous foray into lookism, but with all this slapstick and morbidity, one gathers that the intention was hardly to be severely non-p.c. Death Becomes Her is funny, surprising and a wonderful guilty pleasure. T.S.L.

WIND

"How the Cup Was Won"

Wind, the story of how the United States lost the America's Cup to the Aussies and won it back, contains all the formulaic elements of a good time at the movies, but if you don't know your jib from your mizzenmast, most of the sailing jargon will breeze past you. Matthew Modine plays Parker, the famous fumbler who lost for the U.S. the first time, and Jennifer Grey plays his ex-partner and girlfriend who will help him take back the Cup. Modine rarely looks as if he wants the Cup back - it's even more questionable if he wants the woman back; Grey hands in the better performance. Skillful shots of dueling ships on the high seas is impressive, and the road to the inevitable ending America wins big - is swift and sleek. A good movie. T.S.L.

PET SEMETARY II

"Nothing But Blood and Bore"

After his movie star mom is electrocuted on the set of her latest movie, Jeff (Edward Forlong) and his veterinarian father (Anthony Edwards) move to the house inhabited by the family from Stephen King's Pet Semetary. Jeff first gets the idea to resurrect his mother when a neighborhood boy, Peter (Chris Weaver), brings his dog back to life. The plot of Pet Semetary II succeeds in presenting more blood and gore than the original. The sequel slashes countless innocent victims. Notable performances by Forlong (Terminator II) and by newcomer, Weaver, as the chubby outcast of the school. Unless you're into chuckling at the decapitations of crazed characters, slaughtered kitties and mutilated mutts, skip this movie. L.B.

SINGLE WHITE FEMALE

"Doesn't Keep Her Promise"

Allison Jones (Bridget Fonda) kicks her boyfriend out of her huge rent-controlled apartment in New York and finds herself Hedra (Jennifer Jason Leigh), the Roommate From Hell in Single White Female. With everything that the movie has going for it (esteemed director, high-voltage acting talent in Leigh and Fonda), it is a pity that Female falls short of being a taut, spooky, psychological thriller. By its end, Female has deteriorated into just another slasher film, with Leigh's character wandering around armed with knives and hooks. Director Barbet Schroeder seems so bent on filming a commercial slasher film that he shoots past the rich underbelly which the audience really wants. B.S.

MR. SATURDAY NIGHT

Curtains For Billy Crystal

BY TIM LEMIRE

The challenge to Billy Crystal in Mr. Saturday Night (Crystal co-writes, produces, directs and stars) is to make an entertaining movie about a nonentertaining character: Buddy Young, Jr., a comedic middleweight and semi-star who is now an aged has-been and curmudgeon, playing retirement centers and Chinese restaurants. "I never got the act perfect," laments Buddy at the butt end of his career, and the same feeling pervades Mr. Saturday Night; it's an all right joke, a touch too mawkish, and ultimately, not a show-stopper. Buddy Young brings down Mr. Saturday Night, as if poisoning the movie with his own mediocrity.

But a movie about a mediocrity need not be mediocre: This Is Spinal Tap was a funny and successful movie about a band of mediocrites. The difference between Spinal Tap and Buddy Young is that the British boneheads aren't aware of the fact that they were washed up as soon as they started. Buddy Young, Jr. - as we see him throughout his career in flashbacks - seems to always be aware of his shortcomings. He fears them, and lashes in rage against them (against his audience, his family and friends), thus ruining his own career. Like his agent/brother Stan (David Plower) tells him as an old man, "You took every bad break and made it worse. You are where you are because of who you are."

It is also Buddy's brother Stan who reluctantly tells Buddy the truth at the beginning of the movie (Buddy's not that funny). Buddy whips off one-liners like Henny Youngman, with the acrid touch of Don Rickles, and although he hits the mark more than a few times, most of his jokes are as tired and as lame as he is. Audience members may look at Buddy and have the same reaction Buddy has when, as an old man, he tunes into a young comic, joking about drugs:

"You call this comedy?"

Buddy echoes other comic has-beens and old timers: his cigar suggests Milton Berle (TV's "Mr. Tuesday Night"), his failure on Ed Sullivan mimics Jackie Mason's and his Catskills background is reminiscent of names like Shecky Greene, Joey Bishop, Buddy Hackett and Alan King - great in their time, but funny now?

Billy Crystal is better as Buddy Young, Jr. - old curmudgeon, rather than his younger self; then, he sounds and seems like Billy Crystal. When Crystal departs from comedy and takes on dramatic material, the results are unmoving, basically because the mundane script fails him in moments of tenderness. David Plower gives a more sensitive performance as Buddy's brother, hiding anger and resentment behind an encouraging, acquiescing face. Julie Warner is Buddy's supporting wife, who smiles a lot.

Mr. Saturday Night is interesting insofar as we see how the comics of the '40s and '50s rose through the ranks, playing vaudeville and the Borscht Belt, then adapting to playing crowds their own age in Florida. But in the end, Buddy is telling the same jokes - word for word - that he did at the beginning of his career, and his act gets a little tiring. Okay, very tiring. And as far as the emotion in the movie - the death of Buddy's mother, and the split between the brothers - you won't cry as often as the actors do in the movie.

If Buddy's failures had been more embarrassingly funny (like an overwhelming prat fall) or if his character had more genuine pathos (like Jackie Gleason's Poor Soul), thus accentuating and rounding out his comedic style, then Mr. Saturday Night might have been more of a success. But there is no point, like Buddy Young, Jr., himself suggests, in moping over what might have been, and how the act was not nearly perfect. ❑

A Brief History of Time

Winds Up A Stirring Documentary

Director Errol Morris and Professor Stephen Hawking on the set of "A Brief History of Time", based on Hawking's worldwide bestselling book.

BY JONATHAN SARNER

Errol Morris' A Brief History of Time is about the life and ideas of the physicist Stephen Hawking, a leading authority on theoretical physics. Similar only in name to the best-selling book, this documentary is not an in-depth cinematic explication of Hawking's short guide on the workings of the universe. Instead, the details of his life are interwoven with selected cursory discussions of concepts from the book, such as black holes and the big bang theory. In effect, we are presented with an heroic, sensitive homage to a brilliant, resilient scientist. And it is the indispensable latter quality—his resilience—that makes Time a stirring piece of filmmaking.

Hawking has amyotrophic lateral sclerosis (better known as Lou Gehrig's disease), which he contracted while in college and for which his doctors gave him two and a half years to live. The disabling and degenerative muscular disease was the pivotal point in his life. As the progression of the disease slowed, Hawking realized the urgency of his work in cosmology, the implication of which is richly reaffirmed in his many appearances and voice-overs. He is able to communicate only with the aid of a computer (because of a tracheotomy operation in 1985), but is nonetheless eloquent: rendered in the calm, nonmodulating tone of his computer's "voice," his thoughts range from his childhood to theory, the fate of the universe - thus capturing the expansive quality of the universe he studies.

Contrasting the psychic drive that fueled his accomplishments, he claims that he was swept up by an almost institutionalized attitude of indolence in his earlier days at Oxford. As he drolly describes the mentality, so English in its emphasis of divine rightness by natural talent cum class, "You were supposed to either be brilliant without effort, or to accept your limitations and get a fourth class degree."

Unhappily, Time's forcefulness is fragile. Interviews with Hawking's family, friends, and professional associates are bland and confusing at times, as the interviewees are not introduced with subtitled names - an interesting stylistic touch that obstructs the more important purpose of clearly disseminating information.

Morris might have thought that subtitles would have been an atmospheric detriment, not in keeping with the mysteriousness of Hawking's universe as refracted through these individuals. (Unsurprisingly, Philip Glass, known for his trademark circular, minimalist scores, composed the soundtrack, additionally supporting the cosmic ambiance.)

But this criticism is small - a subatomic particle - against the extraordinary vastness of Morris' film. ❑

Fire Walk With Me

"Twin Peaks Returns"

David Lynch's Fire Walk With Me opens with the image of a static-ridden television being smashed by a large pipe. In a welcome piece of symbolism, Lynch forsakes the limitations of television and takes Twin Peaks to the big screen. With the return of Shelly (Madchen Amick), Bobby (Dana Ashbrook), Mike (Gary Hershberger), Leo (Eric Darae) and Chet Desmond (Chris Issak), Walk is Twin Peaks at its most comic and most disturbing. The movie begins as the FBI investigates the murder of a young woman, Teresa Banks. This opening scene holds all of the humor of the film. Sheryl Lee (Laura) and Ray Wise (Leland) also return in a healthy dose of disturbing weirdness from the Lynch mob - if that's what you desire.

School Ties

"A Poignant Shut-Out Story"

Set in the '50s, School Ties is a predictable but still unsettling story of anti-Semitism at a prep school for boys. David Green (Brendon Fraser of Encino Man), who arrives in Cabot, Massachusetts, from Scranton, PA (strike one), works in the cafeteria to help pay his way through St. Matthew's Academy (strike two), and has problems fitting in with the Old Boy network because he's Jewish (strike three). The conflicts David encounters at St. Matthew's give a pronounced look at a time when words like "sheeny" and phrases like "I jewed him down" were prevalent. Brendan Fraser plays David with ease and sensitivity, while his classmates look and act like extras from Dead Poets Society. School Ties may have taken place years ago, but the prejudice persists today, making the film highly relevant.

Crossing the Bridge

"A Bad Trip"

Crossing the Bridge is a lame coming-of-age drama about the high school losers who you didn't care about in school and probably won't care about now. Danny, Tim and Mort are three lads who have been out of school for three years, keeping busy drinking and sleeping late, when the opportunity arises to make money smuggling pot over the Canadian border. There are mud football games, lost loves, fat uncles and dumb lines. Writer Mike Bender taps the collective unconscious of urban adolescence in the same way TV's The Wonder Years panders to the lowest common denominator of childhood experience. The results are cliché and as boring to watch as a slow night on TV. The plot lumbers along like the boy's old blue Buick, and in the end you feel like you've been taken for a ride.

Enchanted April

"A Delightful Escape"

Anyone craving a trip to Italy should book a passage on Enchanted April. Based on Elizabeth von Arnim's autobiographical novel, and sounding like the latest Merchant-Ivory period piece, the plot follows a quartet of 1920s English ladies who escape rain-soaked London for Italy's blue skies and bluer Mediterranean. Both Lottie (English comedienne Josie Lawrence) and Rose (Miranda Richardson) need an escape from their boorish husbands. They find travel companions in the cantankerous Mrs. Fisher (Joan Plowright), and the radiant Lady Caroline Dester (Polly Walker), who craves a rest from a social whirl. Directed by Mike Newell, you can almost smell the wisteria. Enchanted April provides a delightful respite.

Husbands and Wives

"Dial 911 for Psychotherapy"

By now you've heard that Woody Allen's latest is not about the author/director chasing nearly-underage women but about how the breakup of one couple affects everyone around them. After their best friends divorce almost capriciously, Woody and Mia begin to take their problems seriously. Woody's attention is drawn to one his students (Juliette Lewis), a young woman whose confidence and vivid sexuality have brought even her psychotherapist to his knees. Judy Davis is spectacular, Mia looks like she's in Rosemary's Baby 2, and the lines the screenwriter has penned for her are not kind. The unsteady and uncontrolled camerawork of the piece are its greatest weaknesses. In numerous scenes, the characters are miked and interviewed, but it not clear who is doing the interviewing or even why it's being done. B.C.

Larry Storch

A Rembrant of Impressions

BY MARY SHEPPARD-EARON

Larry Storch is a generous, thoughtful and very funny man. If he could change anything in the world, "there would be no more empty pockets. Everyone would have a piece of the pie."

It was a humid day in September and the heat blasted the sidewalks outside. While seated in the cool red and gold interior of the Wilbur Theater, I was privy for 45 minutes to the impressions of the late greats Jackie Gleason, Frank Fontaine, Phil Silvers, Billy DeWolfe, Desi Arnaz and Phil Harris.

Mr. Storch spoke with a twinkle at the way his life turned into an actor's at the age of 7 when, at a public school in New York, he was more of a clown than a student. When he didn't find his audience there, he quit school and hit the comedy track in burlesque clubs across the country - including Scully Square, or "The Combat Zone" in Boston. As a warm-up act, Storch says he went on and there was the audience. Good or bad, he quickly got over the shock of performing in front of people. Those early days "validated the stage" for him, and performing live today is still the best part of his job.

Phil Harris brought Larry Storch to Hollywood and introduced him to Lucy and Desi Arnaz. He became the lead-on performer in Desi's club and from there, it was more clubs, movies, the stage and finally television, where he landed the part of Corporal Agarn in the long-running comedy hit series, F Troop. The Abbott and Costello style of humor between Sargent O'Rourke (the late Forrest Tucker) and Corporal Agarn is still one of Storch's, and America's, fondest television memories. Storch remembers Forrest Tucker taking him aside early on in the series, saying, "We gotta make 'em laugh: you, me, the captain, the burglar and the Indians."

Jackie Gleason and Phil Silvers were Storch's strongest comedic influences. They were "meat and potatoes actors." Jackie Gleason played Ralph Kramden on The Honeymooners and Phil Silvers was the famous "conman," Sargent Bilko. Another "meat and potatoes actor," according to Storch, is Vincent Gardenia, co-starring with him in Breaking Legs. Gardenia is a "great, great character actor."

When asked what his alternative career may have been, Mr. Storch says music. Along with three cats, he brings his saxophone on tour with him. "Not that I'm good at it," he is quick to say, "but I think if anyone can play an instrument, even badly, he's hobnobbing with the gods." And speaking of gods, upon seeing another Breaking Legs co-star, Karen Valentine, crossing herself religiously before going on-stage, Storch yelled to her in a New York accent, "Karen, God don't cover off-Broadway!"

The "off- Broadway" smash hit comedy, Breaking Legs premiers at the Wilbur Theater on September 29 and plays through October 18. ❑

MEN ARE FROM MARS, WOMEN ARE FROM VENUS

"MEN ARE FROM MARS WOMEN ARE FROM VENUS" BY JOHN GRAY, PH.D., PUBLISHED BY HARPER COLLINS; 286 PAGES

BY VICKI STIEFEL

A year ago, Tuck, a writer friend of mine, said he was contemplating writing a book that exposed women as an alien species. This was to be a work of fiction...sort of. Well, someone beat ol' Tuck to the punch.

Men Are from Mars, Women Are from Venus. An intriguing title for a work of fiction, don't you think? Except this work is by an eminent psychologist and sits squarely in the non-fiction section of your favorite bookstore.

Author John Gray Ph.D. is direct and to the point: "Once upon a time Martians and Venusians met, fell in love, and had happy relationships together because they respected and accepted their differences. Then they came to Earth and amnesia set in: They forgot they were from different planets."

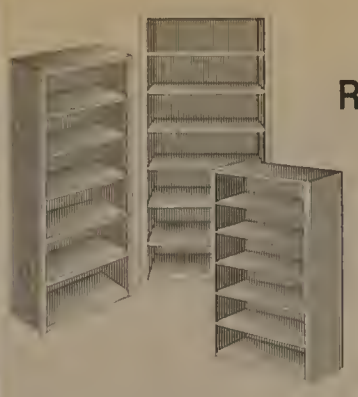
Men Are from Mars, Women Are from Venus reads well. That's part of its charm. It's fun, actually. As I explored Mr. Gray's alien landscape, I felt enormously empowered. Finally," I said to myself, "a Rosetta stone for us Venusians." (I can only assume the Martians have the same reaction.)

Imagine this fantasy: You and your fella are driving around Hackensack, NJ...totally lost. It makes sense to ask for directions, right? Noooooooo. He's determined to drive til he finds "IT."

Is this behavior strange, or possibly bordering on the bizarre? The reasons why men act this way are explained in this amusing gem of a book.

Gentlemen: Your woman comes home from work. She spews out all the horrors of her day, then slumps into the chair, a look of frustration marring her features. After you offer several intelligent solutions to her problem, she becomes even more frustrated.

Gray's explanations regarding the above behaviors are enormously gratifying. In truth, his metaphor illustrates the common conflicts that arise between men and women, and within its framework, he offers straightforward advice on how to counteract the many communication problems that exist between the sexes. Gray is not so arrogant to believe that each and every one of his points holds a universal appeal.



The tone of the book is light enough to engender quite a few smiles and even a laugh or two. But Gray's examples not only amuse, they enlighten. Much of what he says is free of the gobble-de-gook one so often encounters within the self-help genre.

He intentionally adopts a clever style, but never carries the alien device too far. A key to the book is accepting that men and women are innately different.

Are we equal? Absolutely. Do we perceive the world in the same way? Seldom. Men and women bring different things to the party. Hell, that's why it is a party.

Though twenty dollars is a hefty price tag, give ...Venus a try. You probably will find the journey to the lands of the Martians or Venusians worth the price of admission. ❑

ARTS

Pleasantly Bombarded by "Ways To See: New Art From Massachusetts"

At The Institute of Contemporary Art

BY CARRIE SHEPERD

There's something slightly disconcerting about an exhibit that contains a 14th-century Italian painting together with a structure coursing orange liquid through yellow and black striped tubing. Bombarded by a multitude of artists, styles, and media, you must simply take a deep breath and plunge in.

In a unique approach to bringing local art to view, The Institute of Contemporary Art's latest exhibit Ways to See: New Art from Massachusetts began with an invitation to five artists from the state to create new work together with other artists of their choosing. The results of these five separate "exhibits" are mixed; but with such an expansive range of works, viewers are bound to find a piece that moves them.

Boston video artist Tony Oursler's group of Massachusetts College of Art associates seems the most cohesive - a series of mixed media works incorporating sculpture, video and audio that work well together as well as on their own. The din from certain sound effects adds wit (or, depending on your mood, annoyance) to this fascinating conglomeration. A myriad of interpretations could be applied to Gilligan's Island (or other TV shows) shown on tiny screens inside small glass houses, through which the aforementioned orange liquid flows on its way to a large gray vat. Two umbrellas, from which light shines through embedded photographic negatives, are also compelling. An audio/video installation visible after nightfall on the exterior of the ICA commands the attention of passers-by.

A unifying theme - displacement - bands Cuban-born Maria Magdalena Campos Pons with her six selected artists; each explores this topic in his or her own medium and style. Netty Schwarz Vanderpol's needlepoint fields are beautiful on their own, but they also express her feelings about the Holocaust, explained on cards accompanying each piece. Of one (a piece which displays her skill of balance in color and design), she says the pastel stripes represent beauty and hope as seen by a 16-year old girl - interrupted by two vertical black stripes which symbolize the two concentration camps to which she and her family were sent. Stephen Grochowski's watercolor and ink naive pieces on incest are especially provoking: Grief Man and Wolf depicts a graveyard of crosses, a howling wolf on one side and a crying face on the other.

Carlota Duarte's black-and-white photographs of the South End's Puerto Rican community are displayed with five other "insiders" views of communities within Boston, including Sue Owrutsky's personal exploration of Hassidic culture in Brookline and Robin Radin's photos of Hailer's pharmacy in Jamaica Plain: one shows a large woman's back as she works behind the lunch counter. Above her and the sloppily hand-lettered signs stating the breakfast and lunch specials is a huge picture of a serene lake surrounded by mountains.

Both Gregory Gillespie and Paul Brown show their own work alongside pieces by artists that have influenced them. Bowen's two large wooden structures have a natural, driftwood-like appearance, and despite their size, seem complementary to Myron Stout's tiny shark-fin shape and fellow Provincetown resident Blanche Lazzell's whimsical color woodblock print of her studio.

Gillespie's realistic painting's are influenced by Italy's religious paintings, represented by Ghirlandiao's The Virgin and Child with Angel's. His painting of his nude, pregnant wife holding a paintbrush, detailed to the veins showing through her breasts, shares this celebration of birth and motherhood. Techniques as well as subject matter serve as influences: Blakelock's Moonlight was the forerunner to Gillespie's landscapes, composed with flattened strokes and deep earthy colors.

Ways to See: New Art from Massachusetts is on display through November 15. ❑

Pal Joey

A Revival of the Fittest

Robert Knepper and Judy Blazer in a scene from Pal Joey at the Hungington Theatre Company

BY NANCY LEONARD

Pal Joey, which opens the season at the Huntington Theatre Company, is simply wonderful! It's an elaborate, colorful, carefully re-thought revival of the classic Rodgers & Hart musical, filled with first-rate performers, who possess strong singing, dancing and acting skills. There's incredible joy in the mounting - a testament to the enduring nature of the American musical - and its sheer size and effort contain the tantalizing possibility that Broadway is on everyone's mind. This is definitely a "must-see" while it's in our midst.

But don't mistake theatrical excitement for likability in the case of Pal Joey. The title figure - even in Richard Greenberg's adaptation of John O'Hara's hard-edged book - remains a self-centered opportunist, a song-and-dance man determined to make it big in Chicago near the end of the Depression. Joey Evans no sooner comes to the "Great Big Town on a Great Big Lake" than he's sweet-talking Linda English (a decent girl he shamelessly picks up in a diner) and moving in on Vera Simpson, a bored society matron.

The two-timing entertainer quickly climbs to the top, where the altitude is not any more comfortable. He gets his own club, Chez Joey, thanks to Vera's largesse, but not the class she hopes money might buy. He dallies with the chorus girls, and is surly to his employees. Comeuppance is inevitable - here it's rooted in attempted extortion, and in the women's belated recognition of his flawed character. It's not a happy ending that moves Joey on to Milwaukee - just a wise one.

Greenberg and his collaborators haven't overcome the "likability" problem, but they've softened the darkness. The work, which had a mixed reception when it was first presented in 1940 (it achieved success only upon its 1952 revival), now has a knowing 1990's sensibility. Though Joey's amorality is hardly disguised, we glimpse some humanity behind the deception, and have no doubt that the women upon whom he would prey will do just fine without him.

Of course, it helps that the storytelling is wrapped in a large-scale production overflowing with music and gleaming designs. Four songs - three from other Rodgers & Hart projects - have been added to the score. One, "Talkin' To My Pal," was dropped during the original tryout; it's hard to imagine the show without it. The others fill up blank spots and, for the most part, successfully comment on the action. The traditional score alternates romantic numbers - including "Bewitched," "I Could Write A Book," and "Den of Iniquity" - with colorful nightclub routines for Joey and the chorus girls. The later production numbers provide less editorial punch than the earlier ones. Vera's musicalized infatuations also seem - surprisingly - a little off the emotional mark.

Director David Warren devised the elaborately detailed evening, running nearly three hours, and moves it swiftly and smoothly along through many scene changes. Choreographer Thommie Walsh - who obviously has worked with Tommy Tune - deserves high praise for his varied, eye-catching nightclub numbers. The design team has done extraordinarily stylish work evoking the pre-war era. John Arnone's sets include a splendid pastel vision of Chicago's skyscrapers, a nightclub proscenium whose glitziness increases with Joey's fortunes, and interiors of varying wealth (Vera's Lake Shore mansion, Linda's flowery working-class apartment). A turntable reveals Chez Joey's backstage cubicles, and flying drops create a small-scale haberdashery and the diner. Toni-Leslie James' knock-out costumes range from brightly variegated show-biz scantiness to expensive suits and gowns. MGM could not do better! Peter Kaczorowski's lighting is wonderfully apt and moody in its many manifestations.

The multi-talented performers are perfectly in touch with the action. Robert Knepper's compact, weasel-like Joey is not much of a dancer, but sings well, and acts with polished dexterity. He looks small and scared, almost rat-like, as the game turns against him. Statuesque Donna Murphy is wonderful as Vera, mixing cool disdain with lustful abandon; and her strong, deeply sophisticated singing voice is quite impressive. Judy Blazer's Linda, a plain but spunky mid-Westerner, sings melodiously, and is plausibly torn between trust and figurative mayhem. Linda Hart is good as the time-worn chorus girl who reacquaints Joey with his checkered past. As Val, Joey's latest toy, Carolee Carmello has a nice turn in "Zip" - a take-off on the antics of Gypsy Rose Lee.

The Huntington has outdone itself with this opulent revival of Pal Joey, beckoning Broadway with a gleam in its eye. ❑

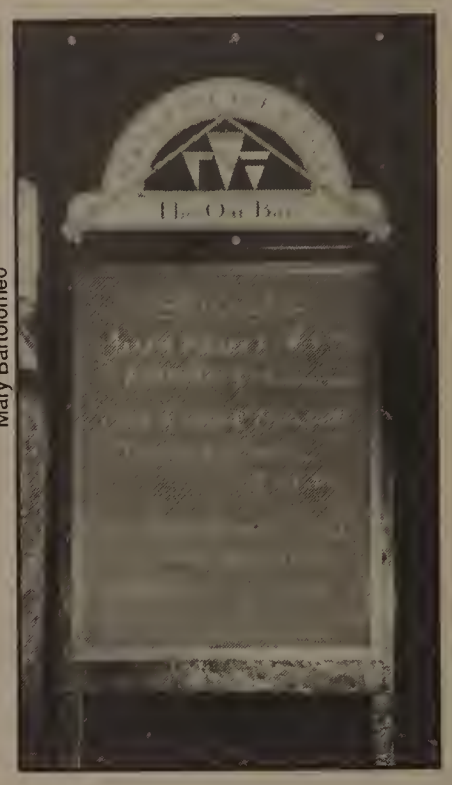
DINING

The Marketplace Grill and Oar Bar

Up The River Without a Paddle

BY MEG WORDEN AND PETER MCNAMARA

We are often asked where one can eat in the Faneuil Hall area. Given the number of eateries in the vicinity, this isn't too difficult to answer, but when you begin to also look for good food, this somewhat narrows the choices. When we learned that The Marketplace Grill and Oar Bar had retained the same staff from the late Brasserie les Halles, we thought we were onto a good thing. Sadly, our experience did not live up to our expectations, as the food was very inconsistent in quality.



The dining room is on the second floor of the Marketplace Cafe complex, and the few window tables provide a nice view over the marketplace. As the name suggests, the Oar Bar boasts a pleasant "clubby" atmosphere, with a boathouse theme made obvious by oars and sculls attached to the beamed ceiling, and sundry nautical objects hanging on the walls. The green and white checked tablecloths add a friendly touch, and jazz music plays in the background.

The evening didn't start out too well. We arrived along with torrential rain on a weeknight, only to discover that the manager had rashly sent all but one of the waitstaff home. Of course, hordes of starving customers (well several) had promptly arrived simultaneously.

The extensive menu contains an imaginative mix of salads, sandwiches, pastas and entrees, so you can snack or have a full meal, depending on your mood. We tackled four of the appetizers, and found all of them to be flawed to a degree. The country garlic sausage in a pastry with honey mustard sauce ($4.95) was a fairly pleasant sausage ruined by the unsuccessful, overly doughy pastry crust. Fried okra ($3.95) was crisp from the cornmeal breading, but too greasy, though we liked the accompanying tangy, spicy Creole sauce. The petite Maine crab cakes ($6.95) were crisp on the outside, but their mild flavor was overwhelmed by the assertive horseradish tartar sauce one assumes was intended to complement them. All the appetizers were attractively presented, and beautifully garnished with mache, showing that care and thought had gone into at least part of the preparation, but the effect was spoiled by the black serving plates. Ours showed more than their fair share of greasy fingerprints around the rim.

After such a beginning, we awaited our entrees with some trepidation, but the contrast with the appetizers was like night and day.

The griddled classic Reuben ($6.95) was very good, though extremely rich. It came with a good crunchy pickle, some enjoyable coleslaw and was marred only by the decidedly tepid french fries. The calves liver ($13.95) was a generous portion, lightly floured and sautéed just right (still pink inside). Its topping of onion, bacon and avocado gave a nice rich flavor to the sauce, while some very good garlic mashed potatoes completed the dish. Roulades of Grecian chicken ($12.95) (hardly surprising) is one of the most popular entrees. A boneless chicken breast is stuffed with feta, roasted red pepper and chopped black olives. The components of the filling were perfectly balanced, so that no one ingredient overwhelmed the other. We were pleased, too, that Greek olives had been used, as they are a much better foil for feta than Californian. A lemon mint sauce provided the perfect counterpoint to this combination, and the dish was rounded off with a portion of some pretty good red cabbage.

Mary Bartolomeo

Our desserts looked absolutely sensational (except for the fingerprint-festooned black serving plates they came on); too bad they were meant only to be seen and not eaten. We ordered profiteroles and roasted fresh pear; both came surrounded by a sauce beautifully embellished with swirls of cream to create an intricate flower pattern. The overly heavy profiteroles, however, were stale and had that "refrigerator" flavor that results when something is kept too long. The pear, too, was lovely to look at, but was overchilled, undercooked, tough, and also refrigerator-flavored. The sauce (supposedly raspberry), tasted of frozen strawberries. The final blow fell when our waitress told us they were stale because customers are usually too full to eat dessert. We were asked if we wanted these to be deducted from the bill; given our obvious displeasure, this should have been done without asking.

Given the circumstances, our service that evening wasn't too bad, and our long suffering waitress coped very well under the pressure.

On leaving, we tried to have our parking receipt validated, and were told the stamp had been stolen (!), but if we went to a nearby restaurant, they would stamp our ticket for us (which they did). Given the bad weather, we weren't too enthusiastic about this arrangement. Of course when we went to retrieve our car, we found we'd parked in the wrong garage and had run up a $12.00 parking charge. Maybe this was one evening we should have stayed at home. And in answer to the question posed at the beginning of this review, well, we think you'd enjoy the entrees here, but stay away from the appetizers and dessert. ❑

Fine Wine On a Tight Budget

BY JONATHON ALSOP

Wine is a big-ticket item in most people's minds. All the associations with "connoisseurship" and "gourmet chef-ism" that surround wine immediately send visions of hard-to-like and hard-to-pronounce $50 French wines dancing in our heads. Going out to dinner and paying three times the manufacturer's suggested retail price makes wine look awfully precious, and certainly doesn't help wine lovers feel like it's natural and affordable. I first saw the phrase "Fine Wine On A Tight Budget" or FWOTB on Prodigy's on-line wine bulletin board last winter. Most of the suggestions applied to wines that NORMALLY sold for around $5 to $7; that is to say, cheap wines for a reason.

OK-Wine On A Tight Budget.

Regardless of what budget you work with - $5 or $10 or $15 a bottle - you want to get as much wine for your money as you can. My attitude is that, in general, I can afford to drink a $12 bottle of wine for $8 long before a $7 bottle at $4.50. Or at least I can afford to think I can. We'll never see the likes again of some legendary FWOTB buys. Like the '83 Ferret Pouilly-Fuisse (2/$9.99). I saw it on the rack the next week in Florida for $32. Those come but once or twice in a lifetime. For day to day wine drinking, I really can't afford to spend more than $7 or $8, and I'd honestly rather pay $5 or $6 if I thought I could. Wine goes on sale big from time to time, and the column should keep you reasonably in touch with retail ops. Consistently good FWOTB venues are The Basement at Brookline Liquor Mart, affectionately known as "The Death Bin," and Mall Wines at Fresh Pond in Cambridge. Blanchard's in Allston has an interesting 2/$12 row. You can count on almost every shop to have a little wine graveyard, someplace where the old wines go to die, but sometimes, you have to be too careful. If the wine's relatively new and interesting, if it looks OK (not brown or smoky), if the bottle's nice and full and the only thing really wrong is a torn label or messed up foil top, I usually go for it; the alternative is to choose between less wine or cheaper wine. Not much of an alternative.

Tastings Around Town

Brookline Liquor Mart, Allston, free tastings: Saturday October 3, 2-4 pm, 1989 Bordeaux: Top Picks & Best Buys; Saturday October 10, 2-4 pm, Italy, Spain & Portugal: The Columbus Connection. Blanchard's in Allston, tastings every Friday 5-8 pm and every Saturday 2-5 pm. Winecellar of Silene, Copley and Waltham, Fridays 4-6:30 pm and Saturdays 2-4:30 pm. Marty's in Allston, Saturdays 1-3 pm. Grill 23 & Bar, Wednesday evening tastings with dinner, Bordeaux selections through October.

Fine Wine On A Tight Budget

Violette Wine Shop, Cambridge: join the 20/20 Club, so called "to make it sound like it has a name," says owner Richard Kzirian. $20 membership fee, "refunded" in December in the form of a bottle selected by the staff for Christmas. Then, on a semi-regular basis, 20% discount on 3 mixed cases, chosen from among 5 to 10 wines, Richard assures were "selected the Violette way," between $4 and $10 a bottle.

Irresistible, impossible, abrasive and eccentric, full of vulgar flavors, the "83 and '85 Chateau de Mille Cotes du Luberon red, have been the wines I've loved to hate for the last year or so. The fruit is unsweetened black raisin with currant and mincemeat. Somewhere in there, the wine tastes like a winecellar smells. Never has any wine tasted so much of freshly polished leather. Delicious, believe it or not. One bottle of '83 left, the absolute last of the batch from the distributor. Saved from the Brookline Liquor Mart wine graveyard, $6.50."

Vineyard & Winery News

Mellea Winery, West Dudley: Harvest Festival, Saturday 10/3 or 10/10, depending on weather. Harvesting begins at 9 am, with lunch in the vineyard for volunteers that afternoon. 508-943-5166 for reservations & details. More tips from Mellea winemaker Michael Shaps: "I'm not sure this is news," he says, "but the yeast is in from France." News? "Well, it means a lot to us." Chamard Vineyards, Clinton CT: recently released '90 Estate Chardonnay, excellent follow-up to Chablis-like '89 Estate. Chamard is available in Boston through Martignetti's, Brighton and the North End. Vinland Winecellars, Middletown RI: "Jazz & Wine," Thursday 10/15, 7-9 pm, 401-848-5161 or 800-345-1559 for reservations & details.

More OK Wine

Georges Duboeuf, 1991 Chardonnay-Vin de Pays d'Oc White, $8; 1991 Syrah Rose-Vinde Pays d'Oc Rose, $5; 1991 Merlot-Vin de Pays d 'Oc Red, $5. The Rose and Merlot are bargains, and the Chardonnay is solid, but you can have much more fun for $8. Duboeuf is always a safe, if predictable, buy, especially out of town. Available almost anywhere in the USA and absolutely everywhere in Boston. Vendange of Sonoma 1989 Red Zinfandel: plain-looking but nice tasting wine, Marty's 2/$9 bin, not a super buy, but a good buy in a big, friendly, country French style wine. Won't age forever, but the '87 is still alive and kicking. Very user-friendly.❑

Fennells & Co.
Fine Wines, etc.
"Boston's Oldest Liquor Store" est. 1878
Town Without Pity –Gene Pitney, 1962

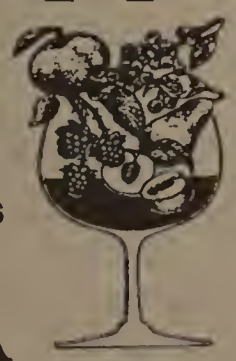
Whatever your state of mind is in around September 1st, change it fast!! You Fennell regulars know what I mean. So to our new neighbors and friends read on...

FIRST Welcome to historic Back Bay. It' s crazy, but fun, students have I.D.'s, no exceptions! Boston is in a bit of a political snit. Watch the local news as much as possible; also keep an eye on the weather, you may have heard about it.

SECOND If you have a car you really like, but don't actually need, leave it somewhere else!! Boston is loaded with taxi cabs, an excellent transit system, or just walk and bike it.

THIRD Use the telephone to expedite services, such as arranging diner parties, functions, etc. It helps us, too.



FOURTH Never ever leave your stuff unprotected, even for a second. Take it from us, the guys in the trench. This town doesn't care about you or your stuff. So watch it!! Otherwise you will be O.K.

FINALLY Remember to stop at Fennells' for your Fall & Winter requirements... Think of us as your "Service Sanctuary" and a good source of local information. Come by anytime. We are opened from 10:30 am to 11:00 pm, Monday through Saturday. Located on the corner of Mass. Ave and Comm. Ave. Serving Back Bay since 1878...

APPETEASERS

BY MARGE CHRYSSOSTOMIDIS AND PETER MCNAMARA

SWEETER THAN A ROSE

You may already know Blooming Affairs for their gorgeous selection of flowers and exquisite flower arrangements (which have brought them almost more awards than they have blooms), but did you know they also offer a line of equally wonderful handmade chocolates, made exclusively for them by a local genius. We think these rank among the best we've ever tried (and we assure you that we've tried many, many varieties). Location is at 70 Arlington Street, Boston, tel. 451-9992.

GOURMET WINDOW SHOPPING

A Touch of Taste is to be an exciting new feature of this year's Greater Boston Home and Interior Design Show at Bayside Expo Center from October 2-4. Specialty food producers from the New England area will exhibit a range of gourmet products which can be both tasted and bought, and there will also be a special Chocolate display. Jerry Rubin, owner of Just Cookbooks, will be displaying - what else - a wide range of cook books, and there will be guest appearances by celebrity authors of many of these books. Hours are noon-10pm October 2, 10am-10pm October 3 and 10am-7pm October 4; tickets cost $7.00 at the door.

RAD COMES TO NEWBURY

Look for something new at The Other Side, located (of course) at the "other side" of Massachusetts Avenue at 407 Newbury Street, tel. 536-9477. Owners Jeff Gallea and Sean Collins hope to incorporate West coast ideas with an atmosphere that's partly 60s psychedelic, partly classical and partly funky(!). Offerings (all of which emphasize healthy eating) will include hearth breads, gourmet sandwiches, coffees, a wide assortment of creative juice drinks (with ingredients like ginger and wheat grass extract), plus wine and beer. They want this to be a place to "hang out;" they also promise "funky entertainment;" fans of short films and videos should stop by on Monday evenings. Jazz brunches are planned for weekends. At press time, opening day was tentatively scheduled for October 6.

PASTA, PASTA, PASTA

At the Warren Tavern, pasta for two is now a permanent fixture on the menu. $21.95 brings two people pasta of the day (and not just any pasta - it could, for example, be basil and cheese tortellini), prepared with a white shallot cream sauce, sautéed sausage, grilled chicken and sundried tomatoes. A jug of sangria, salad and bread are also included in this price. For information, call 241-8142.

News from Cambridge's Central Square: Asmara, the popular East African restaurant, has crossed the road to more spacious premises and is now located at 739 Massachusetts Avenue, tel. 864-7447. Look for Italian lunch specials; note also that they now have a wine and beer license...Farewell to that old standby, Nick's Steakhouse (also known for a time as George and Nick's), which closed down after many, many years of operation. In its place at 569 Massachusetts Avenue, you will find Butchie's BB-Q and Grill, tel. 491-7633, open daily from 11:00am - 11:00pm. Here owner Butchie Harris (of Jimmy Mac fame) serves up traditional Southern barbecue at bargain prices... Meanwhile at 700 Massachusetts Avenue, the Seafood Grill Oyster Bar and Market Place is "coming soon." Watch this space for updates.

CHINA HITS THE GALLERIA

Moving to another part of Cambridge, welcome to Tai Pan at the Cambridgeside Galleria, tel. 494-0008, a contemporary, classy new Chinese restaurant that's open daily. David Yue, owner of the Beijing Restaurant in North Andover has teamed up with Nancy and George Chan, owners of Chinatown's New House of Toy, to provide a menu incorporating authentic Szechuan cuisine with the Hong Kong/Cantonese style traditionally associated with Boston's Chinatown. Lovers of dim sum are in for a special treat, as both Hong Kong and Northern styles will be served at weekends. Other features include exotic drinks, lunchtime buffets and a home delivery service. ❑

Corrections: Millie D'Olio, who recently left Marais restaurant, was not the pastry chef, but was her assistant. The pastry chef is Bernadette Kelly-Collins, and she is indeed still at the restaurant. We are also advised that the correct name for the restaurant is Marais (as opposed to the Marais), as in let's go out to Marais.

PANTS ARE MAKING HEADLINES

They're Returning for Both Day and Night Dressing

BY MARY LAWLOR

Pants are making a major fashion statement these days. They're popping up in almost every American collection for daytime to evening dressing. Fact is, pants haven't been "center stage" for years. Why the renewed interest? Some say it's because there's been a change in hem length to the new longer look. Whenever there's indecision about hemlines, many women turn to trousers. Whatever the reason, it's certain that pants and pantsuits are not about to replace skirts - long or short. Designers see pants as options. For daytime, the most popular pantsuits are designed in everything from menswear pinstripes to gray flannel in widths of narrow to wide. For evening, there's silk, satin and velvets - many featuring a pajama leg. One thing is certain; the newest pantsuits are polished, pulled together and priced at all levels. ❑

French gray flannel is used for this pantsuit designed by Boston's Alfred Fiandaca. The suit is soft and easy and worn with a pleated, silk charmeuse dress blouse.

Tuxedos are back on the fashion scene for black-tie evenings. Designed by Linda Allard for Ellen Tracy, this tux is teamed with an ottoman vest and white pique shirt.

FASHION GUIDE TO WEARING PANTS

- To determine the proper length of your pants, check to see that they hit the middle of the foot at the front, and the bottom of the heel at the back.
- For correct fit, use a full length mirror - especially for a rear view. Also - sit down to test the pants for comfort.
- Wear pants with either a flat or medium heel. (High heels are being shown with evening pants) Hose should match either pants or shoes.
- For added drama, add a belt. It'll give the pantsuit a finished look.
- If you're going to wear stirrup pants, team them with flats, a medium heel or a low boot.
- Think twice before wearing leggings. Unless you have great legs, forget it. They're a no-no for those with heavy legs, wide hips or big fannies. (Leggings are hard to wear)
- Fall city shorts (with matching jacket) look best with a flat or medium heel shoe and hose that matches the suit or the shoe.
- Please - no high heels with stirrups or leggings.

Boston Baroque Celebrates Its Twentieth Season

BY STEVEN BROWN

"The concerts that attract the most people are the ones that have a single major work such as Messiah," explains Martin Pearlman, the ensemble's founder and director. "For me, the most exciting ones are the mixed ones, like our first concert which is called The Virtuoso Baroque. The main work will be one of the rarely heard secular contatas by Bach, number 210, which is a wedding cantata." Soprano Nancy Armstrong will be the soloist. Pearlman adds that the difficulty of the soprano part accounts for its being so rarely performed. (There is only one performance available on CD).

Ironically enough, the opening work on this program will be Johann Hermann Schein's Banchetto Musicale. "That was our name for 19 years," Pearlman says, "and we've performed it only once before." Also on the program is the suite from Platée by Rameau. "Rameau was a great colorist, a brilliant orchestrator, which is not normally associated with the baroque or even the classical period." Rounding out Boston Baroque's opening is one of the Handel Concerti Grossi from their debut CD on Telarc.

Due to be released in October is Boston Baroque's recording of Handel's Messiah, a work that they have been presenting as their annual Christmas offering since 1981. They were the first to perform a period-instrument Messiah in Boston and were among the first to do so in the nation. Pearlman points out that his choice of tempos are on the brisk side, adding that this really shows off the chorus. "Two of the soloists in this season's Messiah, Karen Clift and Bruce Fowler are on the recording. But Jeffrey Gall, the countertenor who used to live in Boston and hasn't been heard here in years, is also joining us."

"I think it is important for us to record Messiah early," he says. "It is really a signature piece for us and it establishes what we can do. I was surprised and pleased that Telarc decided to go ahead with it so early in our relationship. Because Telarc has an audiophile following, there are people who will buy everything that they put out," he continues. Pearlman welcomes the prospect of Boston Baroque reaching the broad audience that the label draws, some of whom will most likely be encountering the period-instrument approach for the first time.

As for the future plans with Telarc, the second volume of Handel's Concerti Grossi should be out in the spring. Beyond that, Pearlman isn't certain what will follow. He adds that among the works Boston Baroque would like to record for Telarc are The B-minor Mass, the Haydn masses, the Magnificats by J. S. and C. P. E. Bach (which will comprise Boston Baroque's final concert of the season in May) and The Brandenburgs, which he adds, haven't been recorded by an American period-instrument ensemble for 15 years. Also on his list are more of the Handel oratorios.

Boston Baroque

Formerly known as Banchetto Musicale, Boston Baroque, under its new banner, begins its 20th season on Friday, October 9th at 8pm in Jordan Hall. For more information about their concert season and tickets, call 617-641-1310.

Boston has long been a center of activity in the sphere of baroque music as well as medieval and renaissance music. Today it is recognized as one of early music's preeminent centers. Asked why this is the case, Pearlman cites his own initial attraction to Boston. "The reason I came here and why a lot of people started off here is because there were instrument builders here, going back to [harpsichord makers] Hubbard and Dowd in the 50's and early 60's," he explains. "When I first started, Bachetto was the first group to perform baroque music on period-instruments, which in those days were hard to find."

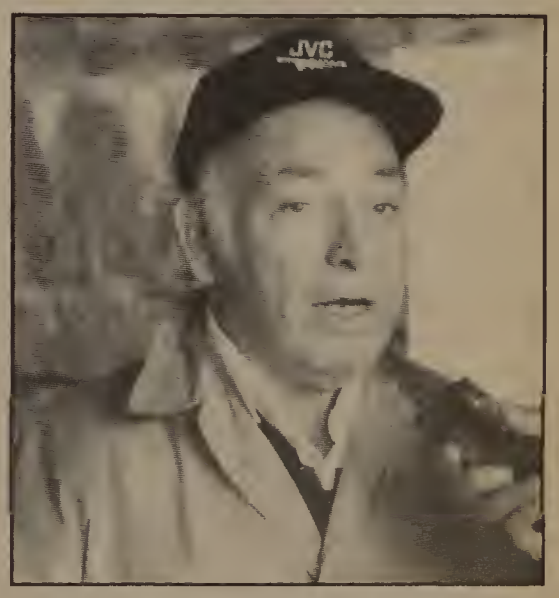
Today, thanks in large part to Pearlman and an ever growing core of dedicated musicians (many of whom had to relearn their instruments), period-instruments performances in Boston are becoming much less of an exception to the rule. ❑

The Foremost Impresario

George Wein Explains His Creative Process

BY S.G. PROVIZER

While several thousand music fans huddle under umbrellas in a steady Newport rain listening to the likes of McCoy Tyner and Herbie Hancock, a squarely built 66 year-old pianist named George Wein wanders contentedly around backstage. If Wein has the look of someone who's seen it all before, he has. Founder and producer of the Newport Jazz festival, Wein is the most successful impresario in the history of Jazz.



Wein, a native of Newton, started the Newport Jazz Festival in 1954. In the 38 years since, he has moved on to produce the Newport Folk Festival, the New Orleans Jazz and Heritage Festival, the Nice, France Jazz Festival, the New York Jazz Repertory Company and concert tours for the likes of Louis Armstrong and Duke Ellington. His own group, the Newport Jazz All Stars, has established itself as a solid musical institution, through which many of the foremost mainstream players in Jazz have passed.

In learning Wein's story, there is a sense that destiny took a strong hand in shaping the man to his work. While in his teens, Wein's older brother took him around to nightclubs and introduced him to Jazz. He was strongly drawn to the music and became proficient enough on piano to gig around town. Almost from the start though, fate had something different in store for him than just playing. "I didn't consciously start out to be a promoter," he explained. "When I was working with a band, I found out that the band didn't have a job. Some way or another, I thought about doing something and this made me an organizer. It was a natural thing. I didn't think I was going to conquer any worlds."

Wein started one of Boston's best known clubs - Storyville in Kenmore Square - and ran it successfully for several years. When the unusual notion of having an outdoor Jazz festival arose, he proceeded to organize the kind of extensive and diverse concert schedule that has marked his festivals for almost four decades. Through the years, however, he has had his detractors; some have criticized his mixture of commercial music and purer Jazz. Wein is a pragmatic man and he did what he had to to survive.

His personal philosophy is actually akin to Joseph Campbell's "follow your bliss" idea. "I get very impatient with young people who want to make money too fast," he said. "Get out there and do it! The rewards will come. The rewards are what you're doing in your life. That's reward enough if you feel you're doing something that makes sense."

In the early 70's, when the infusion of Jazz-influenced Rock bands like Blood, Sweat and Tears and the Mothers of Invention led to a problem with crowd control, Wein moved the Festival from Newport to New York. In the process, he invented a new kind of urban festival which utilized nightclubs, concert halls and outdoor venues for concerts throughout the city.

George Wein being interviewed backstage at the Newport Jazz Festival

Wein has a surprisingly matter-of-fact attitude toward his accomplishments. "[When] I wanted to do a concert, I hired musicians and did a concert," he explained. "I mean, I never sat still and said, 'Gee, I wish.' I went out and did it. But I didn't think I was doing anything special and I still don't."

Lately, he's been interested in creating a festival that will explore the common ground - the inter-relationships between musics of different cultures. It's only in the formulative stage, but Wein will no doubt bring his formidable combination of musician, negotiator, pragmatist and dreamer to bear. The result will undoubtedly be a sound worth hearing. ❑

Jethro Tull Plays The Orpheum

Ian Anderson Sheds a Little Light On His Music

BY SANDER WOLF

As Ian Anderson will readily admit, there are very few musicians in the world who command as much attention as he does. His twenty-four years as frontman for the classic rock group Jethro Tull have propelled him to a position as one of the most widely recognized flute players in the world, and his band's new live album, A Little Light Music, certainly doesn't hurt that image. Recently recorded on a scaled-down tour that took the band across the Western Hemisphere and sparked capacity crowds in Jerusalem, Athens and the band's native turf of England, the album contains sixteen reworkings of both new and old Tull material as well as a cover of the traditional folk song "John Barleycorn." The title of the album, which would seem like a reference to Mozart's Eine kleine Nachtmusik (A Little Night Music), is actually a generic reference to classical music. Noting the similarity to Mozart's creation, Anderson comically acknowledges "that great minds think alike," but the title is actually taken from what BBC radio used to call middle-of-the-road classical music, played during the daytime when Anderson was growing up.

Dave Mattacks, Dave Pegg, Andy Giddings, Ian Anderson and Martin Barre

A Little Light Music, unlike previous Tull albums (especially the live albums like Tull's most recent, 1978's Bursting Out) is unique in that the focus of the band has partly shifted away from Anderson and onto guitarist Martin Barre. "The focus should not just be on me, and one of the great things when you can play in a less 'grand scale' rock event - when you are in a smaller theater - [is that] you don't have to perform in 'grand' and 'big gestures' and therefore the things that the other guys do - the subtleties - are more able to come across." This philosophy is the reason for Barre's surprising acoustic guitar solo on the showpiece "Bourée" and "Under Wraps," which Anderson introduces by saying, "Back in '84, we toyed with the world of synthesizers and technology and then decided it was just better to keep Dave [Pegg, bassist]." It is this form of the band that will arrive at the Orpheum for three almost sold-out nights that begin on October 1.

Jethro Tull, as part of the "Light and Dark Tour" will appear and play an hour-long acoustic set, take a 20-minute break "to take a pee," and then come back with for another hour to play a hard-rocking electric set. The show is meant to please both the old Tull diehards and the new fans who will experience Tull for the first time.

Upcoming events will also maintain the same theme. In the works (according to Anderson) are a 25th anniversary box set of remastered live shows and rarities, a possible Ian Anderson solo album and a probable duet with Anderson and classical flutist James Galway. It's a pretty active schedule, especially from someone who at 45 jokes a little too much about being "too old to rock and roll." ❑

Album Reviews

Nine Inch Nails
"Broken"
Interscope Records

Three years of record label problems haven't made things easier for Trent Reznor. Where some bands find bliss in their popularity, he's found nothing but hurt, hate and frustration and he nearly vanished via spontaneous combustion. Broken is just what it appears to be - sharp, cutting and painful. With shards of fury that cut through Ministry's wall of rage like a scalpel to the abdomen, Trent doesn't focus his blazing emotions on individuals, like he did on Pretty Hate Machine. "You know me/ I hate everyone," he roars on "Pinion." Where Pretty Hate Machine was stark naked in his feelings of hate and hurt, exposing the true feelings of someone who's been screwed over too many times, Trent wraps himself in blankets of venomous white noise and frenzied industrial guitars. In "Terrible Lie," he was a victim of divine damnation ("My head is filled with disease/ my skin is begging you please/ I'm on my hands and knees"). But in "Gave Up," the god who he thought had cursed him, has suffered the fate of his growing nihilism ("There is no god up in the sky tonight/ no sign of heaven anywhere in sight"). While Morrissey may warble the sad refrains of angst and hurt, Trent revels in the burning fury of hopeless reality. He may have broken his pretty hate machine through legal battles, but he doesn't need any weapons to fight this war. Raw, naked rage is his most powerful weapon and there's no safety on his trigger.

Roger Waters
"Amused To Death"
Columbia

Roger Waters' long awaited CD finds him renewing most of his Pink Floyd trademarks (especially those found in the morbid bricks of The Wall), but Amused To Death is more apt to recall his solo days around the time of Pros + Cons Of Hitchhiking.

The big difference in the new album is that it sounds far better than any of his previous works partly since it was recorded in "Q Sound." While listening to the album, dogs appear to bark from across the street and phones ring from downstairs. It's a technological advance used correctly so that it draws the listener even deeper into Waters' warnings of nuclear demise and global frustration. Standouts include "What God Wants (parts I, 2, and 3)," "Watching TV" which features vocal harmonies from Don Henley and the title track, "Amused To Death." The album is, in typical Waters' style, full of sound bite surprises and black humor, and takes your full attention to understand.

Tchaikovsky
"Pique Dame"
Mirella Freni, Vladimir Atlantov, Dmitri Hvorostskovy, Maureen Forrester, Sergei Leiferkus,
Katherine Ciesiski
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Seiji Ozawa, Conductor
RCA

Anyone who was fortunate enough to have attended a performance of this opera, presented in an imaginatively semi-staged setting last season, will remember it as being one of the BSO's most shining moments in recent years. Not only was Ozawa firmly rooted in his element with this work, but the orchestra was in especially good form, playing with extraordinary commitment and polish. If anyone can be singled out from this consistently fine cast, it is tenor Vladimir Atlantov in the role of the self-destructive Hermann. Pique Dame has been making inroads into the standard operatic repertory as of late. And this is as it should be. It has all the ingredients that constitute good opera - a compelling story of love and deceit and a score that stands out as being among Tchaikovsky's masterpieces. In Pique Dame, Tchaikovsky can very much be called the 'Russian Verdi.' RCA, which for decades was the label for which the BSO recorded, has done admirably in this renewed, albeit temporary, partnership.

Exodus
"Force of Habit"
Capitol

Exodus became thrash legends years ago when they crafted the mosh pit fave "Toxic Waltz" ("Kick your friend in the head and have a ball!"). Force of Habit, their fifth release, is their best recording yet, for it is completely perfect - no weak points. Through thirteen songs, Exodus composes an unbelievable wealth of riffs - the thickest and tastiest of the last heavy metal decade. From the eleven minute epic "Architect of Pain" to the quickening of "Feeding Time at the Zoo," guitarists Rick Hunholt and Gary Holt tantalize with huge chords and crazily constructed solos. Steve Souza's gremlinish snarls make it a fun trip to a metal carnival of money-hungry businessmen, wasted war taxes, suicide and. . . the dangers of feeding zoo animals! Lyrics rebound from the serious social commentary of "Let me paint you a portrait of a man whose very name would define in times to come all things profane," to the insanity of "Yeah, it's feeding time at the zoo/ If you get too close, you'll lose a finger or two!"

Exodus prove beyond the legions of metal bands by serving both heavy and light lyrical fare while keeping the music rivetingly thick - NO wimpy or artsy riffage. While most veteran bands have shrivelled up and slowed down in old age [read: Metallica, Suicidal Tendencies], Exodus still waters their thrashing roots and extends the statement on Impact Is Imminent: "Four albums. . . and STILL no ballad!"

The Wallflowers
"The Wallflowers"
Virgin

Being a great admirer of the rock and roll poetry of Bob Dylan, I've been hoping that the genetic coding for literary skills had been passed on to his son Jakob who plays guitar, piano and vocals for the Wallflowers. He has inherited the gift for weaving a rhyme, a rustic, seasoned voice that possesses wisdom beyond his years and an adeptness at writing and arranging that spin a sonic web where the listener remains happily captive. From the opening bars of "Shy of the Moon," it becomes apparent that The Wallflowers are definite contenders for the rock and roll throne that The Replacements abdicated last year. A classic road song in the vein of The Replacements' "Somebody Take the Wheel," the instruments fall in line in sequence creating a lush, layered effect and building the dynamic tension. Jakob's voice, which is a nice balance between the melodic and the raucous, enhances both the style and the substance of his composing.

The Wallflowers play down-to-earth, grass roots rock and roll without posturing and histrionics. It's refreshing to hear a band that is dedicated to the songs and songwriting instead of cosmetics. Each listen unveils phrases I couldn't detect before. It's that sense of discovery that's addictive and The Wallflowers make me feel a little like Columbus.

-Nancy Foster Collins

Medicine
"Medicine"
Def American

All new jack noise artists must realize that upon entering musical chaos extremes, they are going up against racket sculptors Sonic Youth. Medicine does not care though - their noise is drilling, with stripping guitars, a high-pitched drum beat and sugar sweet distorted female vocals. The first two minutes of their album is a middle finger-flip off of one monotonous high-pitched chord emission. Either this band has some genuine balls, or they're just making another bad attempt at art music. Fuzzed-out, tinny chords intoxicate the ears, simple drum rhythm cooks at a medium to slow pace and distorted male and female harmonies spill the sound all over the place. Through all the mellow buzzing distortion, Medicine seem to be singing about love and drugs. Nothing new there but the real dope is in the music.

•BOSTON SAIL LOFT 227-7280, 80 Atlantic Ave., Bos.. A popular waterfront bar with a full menu and view of the harbor. The crowd is young and on the move - lots of professionals and business people. With a superb harbor vista, there isn't much need for entertainment. No cover. Casual dress..

•BOW & ARROW PUB 547-6819, 1 Bow St., Camb.. An unpretentious local bar tucked away just off Mass. Ave. in Harvard Sq. A well kept secret by several college students, bikers, locals, and dart players. The perfect place to relax over a few drinks. No cover. Casual dress..

•BOX SEAT LOUNGE 267-3100, 575 Comm. Ave., Bos.. A hotel bar popular with Red Sox fans, BU faculty members, and local business people. One of Kenmore Sq.'s few post-college hangouts. No cover. Casual dress. Full menu. Free cheese and crackers 5-8pm weekdays..

•BULL & FINCH PUB (CHEERS) 227-8665, 84 Beacon St., Bos.. A recent study confirmed what many Bostonians have assumed for years, The Bull & Finch actually attracts more tourists than most of the sights on the Freedom trail! The TV show Cheers uses the doorway of the Bull & Finch for their opening shot, but nothing else. Still, it offers a comfortable and boisterous neighborhood atmosphere. Try it at least once. No cover. Casual dress..

•BUNRATTY'S 254-9804, 186 Harvard Ave., Allston. A rock club favorite featuring top local talent nightly. The atmosphere is dark and smoky, but once the music starts jamming the place comes alive. Moderate cover varies depending on the act(s). No dress code..

•CACTUS CLUB 236-0200, 939 Boylston St., Bos.. Upscale Tex-Mex is the theme here. The atmosphere is decidedly Southwestern, right down to the stuffed buffalo. A lively spot to catch dinner and a few drinks or just a few drinks. Make sure to try the Prairie Oysters, 'they're the balls.' No cover. Casual dress..

•CAMBRIDGE BREWING COMPANY 494-1994, 1 Kendall Sq., Camb.. A light, open bar that brews its own, Regatta Golden, Cambridge Amber, Charles River Porter, Tall Tale Pale Ale and Summertime Wheat Ale. Attracts everyone from tourists and singles to young professionals. No cover. Casual dress. Pub fare served. Live bands Sat.

•CANTAB LOUNGE 354-2685, 738 Mass. Ave., Camb.. Central Square's much loved Blues/Jazz bar. Live music by local bands. Filled predictably with music lovers of all types. Moderate cover varies depending upon the night. Casual dress. A must for Blues fans.

•CANTARES 547-6300, 15 Springfield St., Camb.. A funky dance club featuring live music and an occasional comedian. Catch Latin music one night and Jazz or Blues the next. Cover varies from moderate to heavy. Casual dress. Check out the full menu of Mexican and Spanish cuisine while you're there.

•CASABLANCA 876-0999, 10 Brattle St., Cambridge. If it's Mediterranean cuisine you want, they have it. Their menu offers a wide spectrum of food representing everything from N. African delicasesé to colorful Greek salads. Dress is casual. All types of drinks are served. Open 11:30am-2am all week. Handicapped equipped.

•CASK 536-4840, 62 Brookline Ave., Bos.. Located across from Fenway Park, this friendly neighborhood bar & grill is a combination sports bar (on game days) and a happening night spot. DJ dance music Thur.-Sat. No cover. Casual dress. Full menu. Free appetizers weekdays 4-7pm. Beware of long lines before and after Sox games..

•CELEBRATION 536-1950, 533 Comm. Ave., Kenmore Sq., Bos.. Teenybopping Kenmore style, is there any other way? DJ dance music, flashy attire, light shows, wall mirrors and an elevated dance floor are all a part of the Celebration experience. The crowd is young a mix of college students and other singles. Under 21s are admitted during the week. Moderate cover varies. No jeans, sneakers or casual clothes. .

•CHAMPION'S 236-5800, 110 Huntington Ave., Bos.. It's not just for sports fans. Most nights Champion's is a frenzied dance spot for singles, young professionals and college students. Adorned with sports paraphernalia, this popular sports bar could very well be the Hard Rock Café of professional athletics. No cover. Casual dress but no T-shirts. Full menu..

•CHRISTOPHER'S 876-9180, 1920 Mass. Ave., Camb.. Coffeehouse crowd - veggies, granolas, academics and locals. Enjoy a 60's atmosphere listening to Jazz, Folk, Bluegrass and live acoustic sound. Music varies each night. Food is served and there is a modest cover on live music nights Thur.-Sun. Stop in for the Sun. Jazz brunches..

•CITYSIDE 742-7390, 262 Faneuil Hall Mktpl., Bos.. A familiar spot to young professionals, college students, and tourists. Located downstairs in Faneuil Hall, it has the feel of a local pub despite the crowds. Sample the scenic outdoor cafe in the summer. Nightly offerings of Rock, R&B, and Reggae. Be sure not to miss Sun. nights with the R-rated songs of Khris Wales. Moderate cover varies..

•CLARKE'S 227-7800, 21 Merchant's Row, Bos.. Located just outside of Faneuil Hall, this is a popular meeting place for Boston singles and college students. Clarke's has that old-fashioned saloon appeal that makes it easier to let your guard down. Expect a line on weekends. No cover. Casual dress. Full menu in the restaurant.

•CLUB 3 623-6957, 608 Somerville Ave., Somerville. An established and much loved club that features local bands. Types of music vary like the weather. Mixed crowd depending on the draw of the particular band playing. Moderate cover varies. Casual dress.

•CLUB M-80 254-2054, 969 Comm. Ave., Bos. A New York/Euro-style club, complete with selective doormen. It's just a small room (actually part of the Paradise), but it attracts a good-sized crowd of foreign exchange students and other chic types. Music is usually DJ dance music, but occasionally live acts perform. Cover varies and is generally steep. The crowd is trendy so dress up; it will improve your chances.

A historically good time.

Boston's unique history, as well as it's inimitable style, more or less begins at the Warren Tavern. Since 1870, the Warren Tavern has been a home away from home for anyone in search of a comfy living room chair, a generous portion of food, and a tall glass of beer.

212 years of character & tradition.

The "Last Call" Lady

A Romantic Escape to Marais / Esme

Marais/Esme, that super-chic restaurant/club that opened earlier this year, is one of Boston's newest hot spots, and hot it is. The establishment is divided into two, well actually three different parts: the bar, the restaurant and the nightclub. The restaurant is an adventure in eating, offering an eclectic and savory array of menu items (Mom never made dinner like this!) at somewhat exorbitant prices - yet worth every penny. Reservations are hard to obtain on peak nights (Wed. - Sat.) and the wait for a table can be well over an hour (which is why Marais has thoughtfully provided its patrons with the mother of all Boston bars).

Angela Wooldridge

"The longest bar in Boston" is the funkily decorated Marais' claim to fame, and easily accommodates the more smarmy, well-dressed Biba spill-overs. You will encounter many an Armani-suited lawyer/broker/hungry downtown type (or wannabe) as you walk the awesome length of the bar; doing that walk in a little black dress on a Friday night is like dragging a freshly-killed goat carcass in front of a cage of starving lions. These guys look at you like you have "Dinner" printed on your forehead (or maybe your rump). Not that this isn't grand for the ego, but really - no one looks good with that much drool on their lapels. However, just for the fun of it, I sashayed as slowly as I could all the way down the bar, slid into a seat at the end, and counted to five - one, two, three - "Hi, can I buy you a drink?" (But of course.) However, just as my luckless companion thought he was getting somewhere, I told him I had to adjourn to the Powder Room, and, promptly took a powder.

The Ladies Room at Marais/Esme, is . . . let's just say, I could move into it. Marble floors, brass faucets, clean linen and large enough to accommodate a Sumo wrestling match. (Again, no condom machines but I'm still looking!). Unfortunately, however, one cannot stay in the Powder Room all evening. I decided to foray out into Esme, the nightclub part of this establishment. For an $8 cover, I was admitted into a lush and very intimate interior, replete with heavy red plush drapery and divans, and little marble tables. I felt like I'd stumbled into a Victorian sitting room, or maybe a high-class bordello. Well-dressed but rhythmless people were gyrating on the dance floor (Friday was obviously "White Folks Can't Dance Night") to some pretty funky grooves, while others jostled at the bar and checked out each other. The crowd tended to be generally around the thirtyish range - very energetic, and at 12:20pm, very well-lubricated. This, and a couple of drinks, got me in the proper mood to begin my search for Mr. Right Now.

After making my obligatory rounds, "Hi!" "Hi!" "Hi!" "How are you?" "Hi!" "So good to see you!," I sidled up to the (much shorter) bar and sort of threw my hook out. It wasn't too long before I reeled one in, and Ooh Baby, this was to be my lucky night after all. We danced, we lounged on the velvety red sofas and even made out in the hallway - all those things that somehow seem so exciting when done with a stranger. I won't kiss and tell, but let's just say that at last-call, I was pleased with Marais/Esme. ❑

•COMMONWEALTH BREWING COMPANY 523-8383, 138 Portland St., Bos.. Let no man thirst for lack of real ale is the motto at this microbrewery and restaurant which features glass walls so thirsty patrons can longingly observe the brewing process. The decor consists of copper tables, pipes and beer tanks. Approximately 10 English ales are served on tap as well as Boston Burton Ale served frosty cold in the bottle. Close proximity to the Boston Garden translates to before and after game crowds. Live Reggae and Calypso every Friday and Saturday Nite 9:30 to 1:00. Brewery tours are free, but sorry, this isn't the Molson factory. No samples $3 Cover. Have dinner here and the cover is free!.

•COPPERFIELD'S 247-8605, 98 Brookline Ave., Bos.. Traditionally a beer soaked college bar except after Sox's games when Copperfields attracts an avid sports crowd. Large crowds, Juke box, local live acts blaring Rock & Roll and a small dance floor liven the atmosphere. Basketball and video games too. Modest cover Thur.-Sat. Collared shirts are a must.

•COTTONWOOD CAFE 661-7440, 1815 Mass. Ave., Bos.. Open daily for lunch and dinner, this casual yet upscale cafe makes you feel like you've landed in the heart of Arizona. The southwestern cuisine (try the grilled specials) is complemented by the adobe booths and multitude of cacti. Relax in the outdoor cafe during the hot summer months..

•CRICKET'S 720-5570, 1015 Faneuil Hall Mktpl., Bos.. Enjoy piano music and fresh air at one of Faneuil Hall's most visible bars. The atmosphere can provide a welcome respite from the bustle of people in the outside marketplace. The patio is covered by a greenhouse so there is no chance of being rained out, or try the more traditional indoor section, decorated with wood and mirrors. No cover charge. Casual dress.

•CROSSROADS 262-7371, 495 Beacon Street, Boston. Hailed as one of the last neighborhood pubs in Back Bay, this casual hotspot is frequented by locals, students and young professionals. Among its many attractions are three dart boards, cable sports, a loud jukebox and Guiness on tap. Open 7 days a week 'til 2..

•DAD'S DINER 296-DADS, 911 Boylston St., Bos.. A restaurant on weekdays. A hopping 50's bar at night and on weekends. The crowd varies from collegiate to professional. No cover. Dress is casual. You'll love the old fashioned juke box!.

•DAISY BUCHANAN'S 247-8516, 242 Newbury St., Bos.. This Newbury St. late night hot spot packs up consistently with singles on the make. A dark and noisy place, where at least one anonymous source has protested the lack of condom dispensers at the bar. More action as the night wears on, this is a great place to be for last call. No cover. Casual dress.

•DESTINATIONS 742-1212, 1 Congress St., Boston. Where else can you have a drink, catch a game and learn the waterways of Sumatra all at the same time? This upscale bar has probably one of the easiest methods of learning geographic trivia without having to crack open a map or encyclopedia. The dress code is on the neater side, so no jeans please.

•DIAMOND JIM'S PIANO BAR 536-5300, 65 Exeter St., Bos.. A hotel piano bar with a relaxed atmosphere. Melt into an oversized lounge chair and absorb the music. The crowd runs the age gamut (from 21 to 60+). No cover. Dress varies from casual to business wear..

•DIVISION 16 353-0870, 955 Boylston St., Bos.. This art deco police station is now a bar and restaurant. They serve monster portions of food. The crowd consists of students and young singles. It's a great place for a fun dinner, but save the romantic meals for a quieter place. No cover. Casual dress.

•DOCKSIDE 723-7050, 183 State St., Bos.. A cozy sports bar not far from Faneuil Hall. The crowd is varied - from jocks and business people to singles. Large-screen TV for game viewing. Jukebox music. No cover. Casual dress. More than one Celtic has been spotted downstairs..

•ED BURKE'S 232-2191, 808 Huntington Ave., Bos.. This unassuming spot located at the foot of Mission Hill is where students, singles, and working people mix to the sounds of R&B, Rock, and Soul. Darts, pinball, and juke box music on weekdays. Bands on Thur. and weekends. Modest cover charge on band nights. Dress is casual.. .

•EDIBLE REX 508-667-6393, 251 Old Concord Rd., Billerica. This club, whose logo is king of the dinosaurs, offers a variety of live music with 3 bands playing nightly Wed.-Sun. Rock & Roll is the standard, but Heavy Metal, Acoustic or Thrash can also be heard. Edibles offered. Modest cover varies. Clothing is required.

•ELIOT LOUNGE 262-1078, 370 Comm. Ave., Bos.. A sometimes rowdy and extremely preppie sports bar is known as the unofficial headquarters for the Boston Marathon. Casual atmosphere that attracts all types. Dancing to DJ music on Sat. nights. Modest cover on Sat. nights. No dress code. Their café serves American food, including pizza, burgers and sandwiches .

•FRED P. OTT'S 227-9373, 29 North Market St., Bos.. This definitive Faneuil Hall pickup bar draws predominantly students and tourists. Dance to DJ music on weekends. Moderate cover Fri. and Sat. Casual dress. Arrive early to beat the line.

•FROGG LANE BAR & GRILL 720-0610, 245 Faneuil Hall Mktpl , Bos.. At this large Faneuil Hall patio bar, the crowd is a mix of tourists and locals. Lofted above the crowd in Faneuil Hall, Frogg Lane offers a mixed menu of American and Mexican fare. No cover or dress code. Jukebox for indoor entertainment..

•GREEN BRIAR 789-4100, 304-306 Washington St., Brighton. This neighborhood Irish pub in the heart of Washington Square has the best combination of the Celtic feel far from the parking mess of Government Center. Entertainment ranges from Irish music to the occasional progressive band. The crowd is a healthy mix of neighborhood folk and recent college graduates. Modest cover on weekends. Casual dress. .

•GRENDEL'S DEN 491-1050, 89 Winthrop St., Camb.. In this casual underground (literally) Harvard Sq. bar, you'll see a lot of maroon sweatshirts. Harvard students eat, drink and live here. Some have chosen to move here after graduation. But this establishment has a dark-paneled, German beer house feel and offers Cambridge Lager on tap. If you're not engaged in a philosophical debate, you can enjoy the free appetizers (weekdays 5-7pm). Upstairs offers a full Bavarian menu and has an ongoing fire in its oversized fireplace. No cover. No dress code..

•GROVERS (508) 927-7121, 392 Cabot Street, Rte 1A, Beverly. At Grovers, you'll merge with an eclectic crowd while listening to electrifying live music. Rock, Vocals, Blues. Moderate cover varies. Casual dress .

•HARBOR CLUB 426-8600, 145 Northern Ave., Bos. This 2 floor, 6 bar club offers a sweeping view of the harbor and of Boston's spectacular skyline. Contemporary music with live Jazz Thur. Free buffet every Wed.-Fri. Also available for private functions. Valet parking. Free cover before 9pm. Proper dress. Suit jacket and tie required for male patrons.

•HARD ROCK CAFE 424-7625, 131 Clarendon St., Bos. Sure it's trendy and sure it's touristy, but where else can you watch people ooh-ing and aah-ing at a shrine devoted to Prince. Save any important and serious conversation for the ride home because, chances are, you won't be able to hear each other over the loud music anyway.

•HARPER'S FERRY 254-9743, 158 Brighton Ave., Allston. Perhaps Boston's best known R & B bar, Harpers offers live music nightly. Most of the bands are top local blues acts, but on Sun. the amateurs take over with open-mike night. Smoky but lots of fun with darts and billiards and a large dance floor. Moderate cover varies depending on the act. Collared shirts are required..

Plunge into a posh leather lounge, sit back and enjoy some cabaret style entertainment featuring local and national artists Mon.-Sat. until 11:30 pm. A good place for a business crowd to mix and forget about business. The mood is relaxed, albeit formal. No cover. Proper dress required. Full menu. Hors d'oeuvres served 5-6pm...

•PLOUGH AND STARS 492-9653, 912 Mass. Ave., Camb.. Another of Boston's popular Irish bars. (Now we know what makes those Irish eyes smile) This is a great place to see live music without the cover charge. Music ranges from Rock and Reggae to Blues and Bluegrass. The atmosphere is festive - even a little rowdy. No dress code. Features Bass, Guinness and Harp on tap.

•POUR HOUSE LOUNGE 236-1767, 907-909 Boylston St., Bos.. Take a welcome escape from upscale Newbury St. and join professionals, artists, punks, and college students in drinking or just socializing at this lively, unpretentious dive bar. The Pour House provides a lively but relaxed atmosphere and a menu with a cornucopia of cheap eats. No cover. Casual dress. Full menu until 12:30am. Tue. night is Dead night.

•RATHSKELLER 536-2750, 526 Comm. Ave., Kenmore Sq., Bos.. Affectionately known as the Rat, this is a rock club with staying power. Past headliners have included the Police, 10,000 Maniacs and R.E.M. The Rat attracts a hardcore alternative crowd - lots of black clothes and biker jackets. No cover upstairs. Varies downstairs. No dress code.

•RED HAT 523-2175, 9 Bowdoin St., Bos.. You'll feel just like you're in a London pub. Dark and casual atmosphere. Attracts young professionals and Beacon Hill residents. No cover. Casual dress. One of the few places you can still get pitchers of mixed drinks..

•REGGATA BAR 864-1200, 1 Bennett St., Harvard Sq., Camb.. You can be sure to hear noteworthy local and national acts such as Herbie Mann, Ahmad Jamal, and others on the top-notch sound system. And if you're lucky, you may even catch them live. The tickets sell out fast, so plan ahead. Cover varies from moderate to heavy. No sneakers or jeans..

•RITZ BAR 536-5700, 15 Arlington St., Bos.. Oak-panelled walls and lots of ambiance, not to mention friendly service - even if you're not a corporate CEO. This bar is a vestige to what Boston used to be like in the era of the Proper Bostonian. Sit back and relax to soothing piano music. No cover. Proper dress required...

•RYLE'S JAZZ CLUB 876-9330, 212 Hampshire St., Camb.. If you're a Jazz fan, don't miss Ryles. Downstairs you'll find an older crowd listening to traditional Jazz music. Upstairs is funkier with talented fusion musicians. Feel free to move between floors. Cover varies from moderate to heavy. Casual dress.

•SCULLERS LOUNGE 783-0811, 400 Soldiers Field Rd., Camb.. Renowned Jazz singers entertain here nightly. The bar is well stocked, the chairs are comfortable and the walls are paneled, evoking a mellow mood. The nighttime view of the Charles adds an air of romance. Heavy cover. Casual dress but no jeans or sneakers..

•SEVENS 523-9074, 77 Charles St., Bos.. An English pub on Beacon Hill. A favorite among singles, young professionals, college students, locals and, of course, dart players (they almost won the championship this year). No cover. Casual dress. An added bonus - Guinness on tap...

•SHAY'S , 59 JFK St., Camb.. Harvard Square's sophisticated college pub. Sit back and enjoy wine by the glass in this intimate little joint. The crowd here tends to be a little older - professors and their friends - but on Thur. night you'll still find plenty of students. Patio seating in the warm weather. No cover. Casual dress.

•SWEETWATER CAFE 357-7027, 3 Boylston Pl., Bos.. This active Western bar has earned the deserved reputation as a hot spot to fraternize with the opposite gender. There is no guarantee of meeting your ideal soul mate. But it's undoubtedly worth a try in this bar where single young professionals abound. No cover. Casual dress. Famous for its drink specials and $1 drafts. Tex-Mex food and an outdoor patio when the weather is warm..

•T.T. THE BEAR'S PLACE 492-0082, 10 Brookline St., Camb.. A smoky, dark rock club featuring Garage Rock, Blues, Alternative and an abundance of local music. On any given night you're likely to catch an up-and-coming national act. The crowd isn't afraid to slam and shake so be prepared for a few bruises. Cover varies depending upon the band. No dress code.

•T'S PUB 254-0807, 973 Comm. Ave., Boston. Great food, lively atmosphere and there's always something going on inside. Younger bar-hoppers beware: Only Valid ID's accepted (they're really tough!). Lunches and dinners are delicious and reasonably priced. College and thirtysomething crowd. Never a cover but always a good time..

•TAM O'SHANTER 277-0982, 1648 Beacon St., Brookline. Washington Square in Brookline's only offering of live music and one of Boston's hot restaurant/bars. Keep seated after dinner and wait for the band, but don't expect to be exempt from the moderate cover. Casual atmosphere and dress.

•THE BARMUDA TRIANGLE 437-1011, 200 Brookline Avenue, Boston. Located just outside of Kenmore Square, The Triangle features live music seven nights a week. Catch Boston's best Jazz early in the week, and kick up your heels to Latin, R&B, Reggae and Rock through the weekends. Full bar. Reasonable entertainment charge after 9:30. Weekly giveaways include free passes, round trip tickets to Bermuda, T-shirts, parties and more!

•THE CLADDAGH 262-9874, 335 Columbus Ave., Bos. Under the same ownership as the Black Rose and Purple Shamrock, this quintessential Irish pub in the South End provides live music and fun decor without reeking of pretension or formality. Come as you are, and don't feel like you've got to impress anyone. Enjoy the varied music and join in a sing-a-long. No cover. Casual dress..

•THE LITTLEST BAR 523-9766, 47 Province, Boston. Located near Downtown Crossing. A quick walk from the Orpheum Theatre, As its name implies, The Littlest Bar is quite little. In fact, the place only seats 17 people. Guinness and Rolling Rock are among the beers served on tap. Edibles also served. Hours are from 8:30am-12am Weekdays and Saturdays. .

•TIA'S 227-0828, 200 Atlantic Ave., Bos.. An open air meeting place adjacent to the Marriott Long Wharf. The crowd is young and single and the outdoor patio large enough to accommodate sizable crowds. Tia's gets crowded on warm nights - especially right after work - so arrive early. No cover. Casual dress. Live a capella group Sun. 3-6pm...

•VENUS DE MILO 421-9595, 11 Lansdowne St., Bos.. Attracts a Euro crowd as well as the usual crowd of college students and young professionals. Hip Hop, House and Funk music by DJ. Wed. night is gay night. Cover varies from moderate to heavy. Know who you are and dress accordingly is the club's policy. 21+ unless otherwise noted..

•WALLY'S 424-1408, 427 Mass. Ave., Bos.. Treat yourself to unadulterated Jazz nightly at Wally's. Neatly tucked away on Mass. Ave. not far from Northeastern U., Wally's is easy to miss. The only indication that you've arrived is a small white beer sign out front. The atmosphere is dark, smoky and crowded and above all authentic. Mon. is Blues night. No cover. Casual dress. Arrive early to get a seat...

•WARREN TAVERN 241-8142, 2 Pleasant St., Boston. A funky little bar whose clientiele includes young professionals athletes. Reputedly having some of the most beautiful women in Boston.The bar now attracts manly manly athletes.Stars don't mind hanging out at the tavern , because no one bothers them. TV is alwayson for sports. No tank tops. Bring I.D. Please don't drink and drive. .

•WESTERN FRONT 492-7772, 343 Western Ave., Camb.. A multicultural Reggae and Jazz bar where it's difficult not to get caught up in the rasta spirit. It's dark and dingy inside, but the place sparks alive when the bands take the stage. Cover varies from moderate to heavy. On Sunday nights, visit the Arts Café and enjoy music, comedy, performance art and poetry for only $5. Casual dress...

•WHO'S ON FIRST 247-3353, 23 Yawkey St., Bos.. A sports bar nestled just a baseball throw away from Fenway. Who's plays host to a mix of jocks, college students and baseball fans. (Yankee fans, beware) DJ music and an occasional live band provide the dance beat. Cover varies from modest to moderate. Casual dress. Free buffet and singing contest Fri. afternoons..

•WILLOW JAZZ CLUB 623-9874, 699 Broadway, Ball Sq., Somerville. An alternative Jazz club that's seemingly dark and bleak, but fans love the place. Call the Concert Line (421-9333) to find out which acts are playing. Moderate cover. No dress code.

•ZANZIBAR 451-1955, 1 Boylston Pl., Bos. This large two-story dance club's theme is tropical. The inside is patterned after a Caribbean dwelling, complete with palm trees. Top 40 and Dance music is played to an upscale clientele and the local hotel concierges often recommend Zanzibar as a choice pick to their guests. Cover varies. Jacket and tie required.

HEY BLONDIE- time to grow up kid. You're in first year law, not eighth grade. First of all, loosen your tie: better yet take it off. And give happy hour a break if all you're going to do is piss people off at the end of it. Why don't you toss a few apologies S, C, & D's way? And get a decent haircut.
Dick.

To all those lovelies who hang out around the T and heckle: time for some serious life and self analysis. Don't you think?

YO: all of you who hassled me about not having my dog on leash this summer, have a nice winter. Hope you get caught in a snow drift and a big ole St. Bernard passes you by. Or, better yet, hope a police dog in a customs line mistakes your Aqua Velva for some illegal substance and bites you where it counts.
Know what I mean, buddy?

Hey CVS lady - I am old, repeat old, enough to buy cigarettes! Whaddya think? Time for glasses?

Dear Psycho, Leave Joe alone. He is a big man for all he has been through. He may have a problem understanding life's situations, but he is still a good guy.
Da capo al fine

Big Dawgs! You bastards! Newpon summer '92 finally closed down on us - thanks for the inclusion. Only one problem - I'm pregnant from Stuttman's comforter. Dan - left one. See ya' at the Temple.
-Skirt

Lisa, Remember one thing, there are 2 things in life- snacks and meals - obviously you never had a meal.
Mr. Paintbrush

To Texas-Boy: There's an old saying that goes, "You can't make chicken salad out of chicken shit." So in other words, all your fancy clothes bought with Daddy's money and your tacky cowboy boots can't hide the fact that you're just an overweight, lazy slob who seriously resembles an Elvis impersonator (your ego is as inflated as your body). So lose 20 lbs., get a life and stay out of ours!
With much disgust,
CB & BB

Harris, I didn't appreciate the gag. Neckties? - o.k. The scarf? o.k. Even the video camera was creative, but your dog was an unnecessary addition to our romance, despite how much I seemed to enjoy it. You belong on a farm with that mutt.,
Geena

Randolph, Oh my. Those riding boots and leathers are enough to make me go insane. Walk by my apartment one more time and I'll show you how to ride English, Western, Spanish, Cornish, Danish and if you're lucky - Amish.

Disrobing on the saddle, Linda

Hey! Archie and Denton! Why didn't you tell me she was pregnant???!!!

It only makes all the difference in the world. I thought she just had a healthy appetite. I need help in these matters. The only pregnant female I've ever lived with in my life was my Cocker Spaniel when I was eight years old - and even then I wasn't sure until the puppies arrived. I'll be sure to call you again if I ever need to know how to stick both feet in my mouth.-Travis

Lady in the red car, I'm sorry I was in your parking spot. Didn't have a chance to explain during your torrent of "f - yous" and "I pay for this f__ing parking spots." Common courtesy compels me to explain now. It was no coincidence that I was leaving as you were coming home. Your husband was great, but your bed's too hard. Here's to multiple orgasms, you bony-legged bitch.

Michele,
I know no luxury of knowing what your eyes read.
-Genevieve

Yo Bookem,
How dare you diss me and kick me to the curb.....I have half a mind to slap those big lips of yours...But I be a lady.-SHARON

Russ,
I didn't need you before I left for home last week. I did it myself!
-Your wife

Ellen,
That was a mean joke you played on me so I paid you back. You know how you like to chew on your pencils and you said that one of them tasted kinda funny yesterday. Well, let's just say that I hid it somewhere for a while and not too many things get hidden up there.
R.G.D.

Archie and Alex,
You guys ought to wear jeans more often. You look sexy as hell!
-Lynne

Ryan-Your wt and willing mouth is perfect for all the lonely guys at B.U. - Better than a hand!
Hopefully all of them will get a chance to experience you!
Loads of fun- John!

NATURAL ❤ SELECTION

Like thousands of other happy couples, Kimberly Clayton and Kent Kellough found each other easily and naturally, through Great Expectations. Here is their story

Q. "And what was the advantage of joining Great Expectations?"

A. "Members of Great Expectations know what they want. They don't play games. My first date with Kent was very comfortable, which was a rare first date experience."

Q. "Kent, what do you tell people about Great Expectations?"

A. "It absolutely works. It's not just for people who are looking for dates, it's also for people who have plenty of dates who aren't finding the right person."

Great ❤ Expectations®
We make meeting people easy.

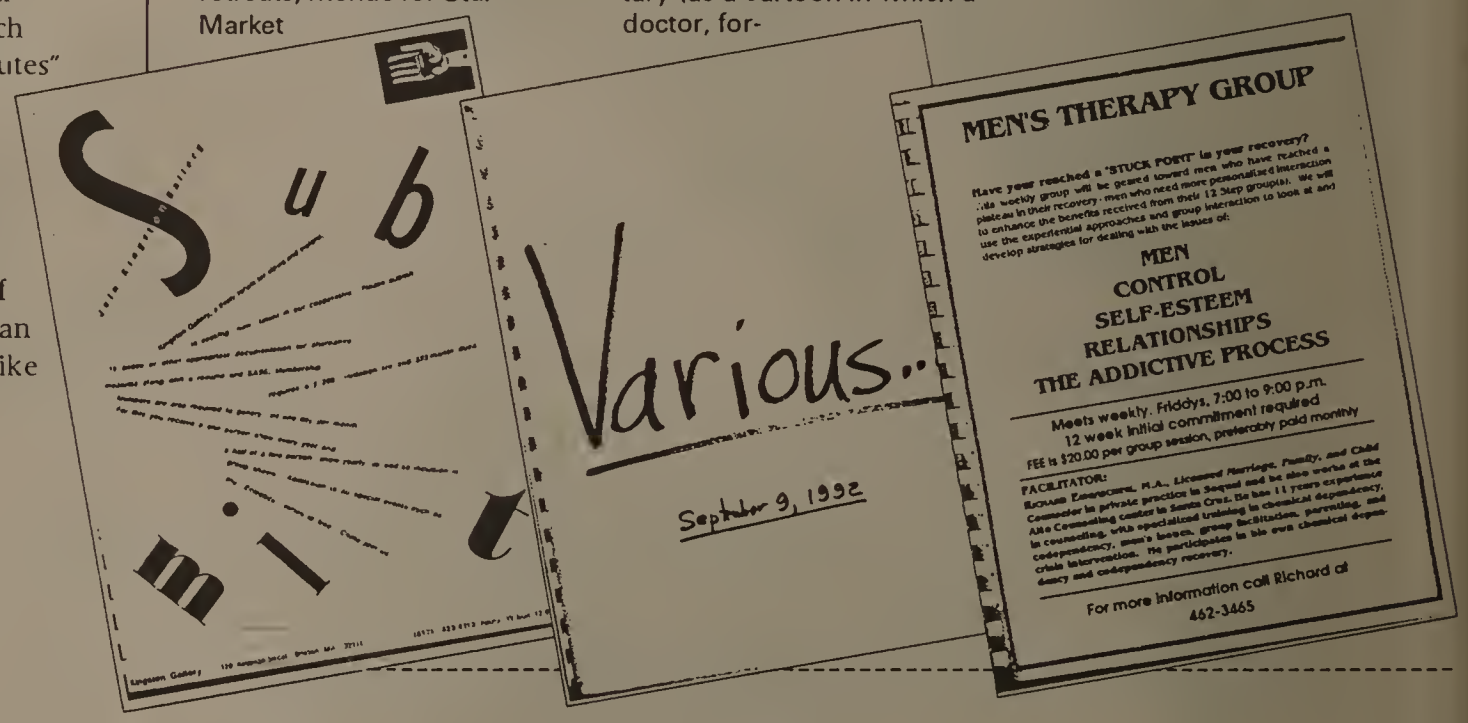
Sessational! Magnifico!



As close as you can get to Italy (this side of the North End), Sessa's in Somerville's Davis Square exudes the authentic flavor of a groceria. Compared to the anaesthetized supermarket equivalents, well, it's hard to compare the spicy aromatic prosciutto, the vivid-looking sopressata (a course-cut salami), the streaky slabs of proscuittino, the chubby little knots of creamily-fresh buffalo mozzarella or the feta swimming in brine to anything. Big containers of sardines, sun-dried tomatoes, nibbly little artichoke hearts, slithery roasted peppers and salty capers line the counter. Imported cheeses, dried cod and bags of onions hang in earthy profusion. People come here especially for the soft mascarpone cheese used to make a dessert called Tira Misu. Fridays, big round loaves of Tuscany bread (crunchy and country-like) make their appearance. And there are many brands of pasta: Del Verde, Alfredi, Ghigi, Barbera and Mennucci of which one loyal customer (Irish, by the way), who "commutes" back to Sessa's from Reading, said "This pasta is so delicious it melts in your mouth. People think there's extra cheese in it, but it's just the Mennucci itself." Canned goods you don't find elsewhere fill the back of the store. But it's also a store that invites loyalty because of its sunnyside Italian-accented staff that gives little "that's amore!" kisses to the air over an especially choice purchase, and treats its customers like valued friends.

First, there's Found Art, in which the unintended beauty and significance in, say, a gnarled bit of old wrought-iron chair leg gets highlighted. This variation - it's actually called "Various" - might be known as Flier Art, a floppy book that brings together in surprisingly amusing and readable form, hundreds of those message-harbingers - those tempers of the times. Richard Gardner has harvested printed stuff from all over: Left-wing broadsides, fliers for AIDS-related support groups, books on dying, leaflets on Buddhist retreats, menus for Star Market catering, the Fungi Funnies "All the News That's Fit To Moulder," newsletters on computer hackery, amazing mind-control seminars, and little postcards announcing gallery openings making up so much of the cultural flotsam we float among (but rarely see as a coherent bundle) all together at last. And one of the ways the "conceptualness" of this Conceptual Art is signaled is by Gardner's noting on the back cover "This page was intentionally left almost blank." Most of the book is deliberate, often ironically-tinged social commentary (as a cartoon in which a doctor, forbidden to talk about abortion to a patient, starts using double-talk and says: "Maria, the blue dog barks at the kite," to which she responds "But will the spotted horse see the tree?"). Though a few inclusions, like an American Express ad, are a tip of the hat to the commercial rapaciousness that lends oblique outrage to the concerns in the rest of the book.

Your Own Private Beasty

Not a teddy bear, not a heffalump, not an eccentric landlady wearing a lumpy sweater, not quite an identifiable animal, either. These outsize sui generis creatures of wool, insecurity and quirks are called Closet Beasties. They're big, and maybe that's because they just forgot to stop eating (aimless paw permanently in the cookie jar). It's hard to determine their gender. Designer Charleen Kinser imagines the character behind the character and proceeds outward. She envisions him exploring "With an original sense of adventure, squishing himself into the little revolving corner cupboard in the kitchen with the baking soda and the salt box, marching into the laundry closet where the brooms stand tall or scooting into Mom's walk-in where the shoes are about his size." Absent-minded collectors, some of these beasties collect grownup's cast-off flotsam, useless, pocket-bound parts of them anyway, like one card or a single poker chip; others have children's left socks, match-box cars or "the younger sibling's book of thrice told ridiculous riddles." Beasties have a musty, cozy, shopworn air to them. One owner, no longer a technical child, has projected her own Aunt Bertha, with her voice and character and quirks onto her Beastie. They move in.

AROUND TOWN

ARTcetera, an art auction to benefit the AIDS action committee, will occur on Saturday, October 17 at One International Place in Boston. The auction will feature over 250 works of art, including paintings, photographs, prints and antiques. A preview of all the works will take place in the Main Lobby of One International Place October 12-17 during the day. Tickets are $50 each and include cocktails, dinner, buffet and dessert. Call 437-6200, x262 or 276 for more info.

Feeling hungry? Feel the need to contribute to a good cause? Care to sample fine desserts, chocolates, cheeses, wine or beer? Then go to La Grande Faire on October 18. The Atrium in Chestnut Hill will be transformed into an international tasting affair featuring 70+ fine food and beverage merchants., including chocolatier T. Winand of Concord Starting at 7:30, this extravaganza will feature various entertainers, including a dance band, a cabaret singer, mimes and caricaturists. You can cast your ballot for the most impressive dessert and chocolate sculptures and perhaps win a prize in the raffle. Proceeds will benefit The Brookline Arts Center, the Museum of Transportation and the Brookline Foundation. Tickets are $20 purchased in advance or $25 at the door. For details, call 566-5715.

Leaving Jay Leno alone for a bit, Branford Marsalis—along with guests Linda Hopkins and Albert Collins—will play at the Berklee Performance Center on Tuesday, October 20 at 7pm. Marsalis comes from a renowned jazz family and has played with such blues greats as B.B. King, John Lee Hooker and brother Wynton Marsalis. This Tonight Show bandleader will feature pieces found on his new CD, "I Heard You Twice The First Time." Tickets are on sale for $25 at the Berklee box office and Ticketmaster outlets or charge by phone: 931-2000.

Ready for some action? Taking its cue from live sports, the U.S. Improvisational Theatre League will provide you with a chance to see world class improv performances combining comedy with quality acting this Friday and Saturday at the Boston Baked Theater in Somerville. With a referee and organist to accompany them, two teams of players will try to out-act each other by performing scenes created on the spot. The catch is that the audience will determine the winners based on how entertaining each scene was. You can even throw things to express dissatisfaction! Tickets are $10 & $8 for students and seniors. For details, call 864-1344.

Spookyworld - the name demands investigation. Just 45 minutes west of Boston, this horrific farm provides a field of screams. Carrying 50 victims at a time, hayrides will take you through acres of haunted lands populated by more than 60 live zombies, ghosts and slimy creatures performing gruesome acts for your viewing pleasure. Dare to dangle your feet off the edge of the wagon! You can also tour the new Haunted House designed and built by some of Hollywood's top horror and special effects creators. Everything needed to throw the consummate Halloween party can be found at the gift shop. Open every evening of October. For more info. and directions, dial 508-838-0200.

COMEDY

Yakov Smirnoff performs Oct. 23 at the Comedy Connection at Faneuil Hall

From Russia With Laughs

An Interview With Yakov Smirnoff

BY KATHY MATHESON

So what was it like performing in Russ— uh, the Soviet Uni— er, um, the U.S.S.R.— I mean, the CIS— er, uh . . .?

"At this point, you can call it Yeltsinville."

OK, Yeltsinville. So what was it like?

"It used to be," began Russian comedian Yakov Smirnoff, "that if you told jokes about the KGB, [the audience] was so scared." Smirnoff said his audiences would "look to the left, look to the right," and generally check to see who was watching them and then let loose. "It was definitely delayed laughter," he explained.

Yet when Smirnoff returned to the CIS (the name he really calls the former USSR) a few months ago, he noticed a dramatic change. "Now, the audience is getting much better," he said. "People are really listening up and beginning to laugh."

Like all Soviet comedians performing in the U.S.S.R. during the Cold War, all of Smirnoff's material had to be approved by officials in the Department of Humor, a division of the Ministry of Culture (and on this we are serious). This censorship left no room for ad-libbing or dealing with hecklers, which is one thing he had to learn when he began performing in the U.S.

Some might think Smirnoff's routine (especially in the "Evil Empire" years of the 1980s) would be stigmatized by the idea that he was a "commie comic," but Yakov said audiences here were not affected by his nationality. "I was not a threat to anyone," he said good-naturedly. "I didn't speak English well enough." But whenever the lone heckler did appear, he'd say, "Where is the KGB when you need it?" and that was the end. Call it the threat of communism.

When he legally immigrated from the U.S.S.R. to New York in 1977, Smirnoff spoke no English. Then again, he didn't really need to. "Every time you get into a cab [in New York], you need to learn to speak a foreign language," he joked. He worked as a busboy, a waiter and did odd jobs to support himself when he first arrived; two years later, he moved to L.A. and was "discovered" at an open mike night at the Comedy Store.

Since then, he hasn't stopped. Smirnoff's book, America on Six Rubles a Day, has sold more than 250,000 copies, and he has made appearances in numerous commercials, TV shows and feature films (Moscow on the Hudson, Brewster's Millions, Heartburn, The Money Pit). Although he said he "really did not have a master plan" for success when he came to the U.S., Yakov Smirnoff has indeed lived the American Dream.

But a funny thing happened on the way back to Moscow: he found out those guys at the Department of Humor were - gasp! - Closet Capitalists. Before embarking on his trip to the CIS a few months ago, Smirnoff called up the Ministry of Culture. "Who is going to censor my material this time?" he asked. To his surprise, he was told that not only had the joke judges been ousted, but all of them had started new careers as comedy writers. "Now," said Smirnoff, "they're probably selling the jokes they took away from me 15 years ago."

Now that is true capitalism. ❑

WORKING OUT

Angela Wooldridge

A Nautilus woorkout in progress at the Allston Squash Club, which offers more than racquet sports to its members.

BY GARY S. KADET

Health clubs, "the singles bars of the 80s" have now become the "crisis management centers of the 90s." The sexual element is still there alright—but far more wary and tentative than ever in its relationship to health. Dedham Racquetime may still trumpet the marriage statistics of "successful" members on their radio spots, but the bottom line now is not only fitness but wellness—or the struggle to survive with a healthy, age-retardant body in what is proving to be, with high unemployment and the threat of Aids, a most unfriendly decade.

Fitness expert and personal trainer Jeff Munger of Dimensions in Fitness, a full-service-club-by-appointment, suggests that, in choosing a health club, some basic criteria be observed before signing on the dotted line. Although not so much concerned that the staff be ACE (American Council on Exercise) or NSCA (National Strength and Conditioning Association) or even IDEA (International Dance and Exercise) certified for aerobics, he emphasizes that they should be attentive to member needs. "One common sight," he says, "is a member doing an exercise incorrectly, causing potential injury, while someone of staff stands by without intervening. Locker rooms should be clean—a nasty bacteria situation can develop with sweating and heavy traffic. And the club should be convenient to you. There's an 82% dropout right within the first two weeks—some clubs count on that."

Personal trainer Lisa DeAngelis of Catalytic Fitness concurs. "After all," she says, "the less wear and tear on the equipment, the less the club has to pay to maintain it, and the more it can afford to spend on the seductive advertising that lured you in to begin with."

Bally's Holiday Fitness Centers of Cambridge and Revere, the biggest and the baddest in the area, have clearly taken this strategy to heart. Its oversold Cambridge facility at the Porter Exchange is a glaring example. Most health clubs have certain "peak times" when they are at their most crowded, but here, almost anytime is peak time. While all its staff is CPR trained, and the club prides itself on its internal certifications as "The Largest Health and Fitness Organization in the World," the sole purpose of Holiday personnel apparently is to sell memberships. Hard-sell tactics aside, there are so many different levels and specials available that the cost of membership is as uncertain as the stock market. You have to be attentive to timing.

Equipment is ill-maintained and locker rooms are not as clean as they could be. (A good third of the lockers in the men's locker room are broken, presumably due to attempted theft.) The club's concern for its members is low. Weight trainers using too much weight and improper form are seldom—if ever—corrected (as the staff blithely walks by touring prospective members). The small free-weight area is so congested with would-be heavy-lifters that weights routinely collide in mid-air. Even worse, tensions resulting from reports of racism in the club's membership policy towards minorities have yet to ease.

On the plus side, worries about the club going under after paying up are nil, as Bally's is a large, as yet financially-solvent corporation, and financing is available for the long-term (36 months) so you can pretty much pay as you go. It's cheap too, averaging under thirty dollars a month. The membership mix is a cross-section of academics, professionals, muscleheads, students with a smattering of Cambridge bohemia thrown in for good measure. And with the influx of traffic, singles do pair up. But as one woman observed, "Sure people can get intimate here—but I wouldn't. After it's over, do you really want to have to bump into your ex every time you work out?"

On the opposite, high end is Le Pli at the Charles Hotel in Harvard Square and at The Heritage in Boston. Just as Holiday is an outgrowth of a casino operation, Le Pli was spawned from a hair-styling salon begun by its owner Sydney Moss, on Mt. Auburn St., 25 years ago. Le Pli is pricey, but Moss makes it clear that you get what you pay for. "This is the first urban club in the country to offer all the same things that a destination spa would offer: hairdressing, skin care, herbal wraps. Just like Golden Door and Canyon Ranch where you go and actually stay for a week. We offer food, we have our own nutritionist, or own physiologist. We provide lectures, offer massage, manicure, pedicure—what one would expect from a spa, with a lot of exercise equipment and aerobics as well." The dues for an annual membership are $115 a month plus the usual initiation fee which ranges, depending once again on timing, from $600 to $800. And personal services, of which Le Pli provides a full menu, from hair-dressing to an Austrian mud treatment or a visit with a club aesthetician, are all a la carte.

"The two clubs are for two different markets," notes Moss. "The Boston club is a little more quiet and clubby. We're much more loose and Cambridgey here. It's wood and tile as opposed to chromium and monochromatic colors. If you weren't a member, you could come and join for the day to use the personal trainer, get a massage and get a haircut. One day will run you $300," says Moss in his genial Liverpool accent, "but we're doing a lot of half days now."

As far as the social scene goes, despite a number of celebrities frequenting Le Pli—David Mamet and Lindsay Crouse were members, and Faye Dunaway visited just days ago — Moss downplays any singles

REMAKING THE BODY

Mary Bartolomea

scene in his club. "Membership is generally people in their 40s, upper income, upper educated. It's not for everybody. It's a club for someone who wants to come and work out. If you want to meet someone, this isn't the place to do it." At 14,000 square feet stacked up on three floors, with a properly certified staff in everything from exercise physiology to cosmetology, it is no surprise that Moss has few concerns about declining membership even in a weak economic recovery.

For the hard-core body-builder, large, airy gyms with a gamut of free-weights and machines such as World Gym in Somerville and Gold's Gym in Kenmore Square offer a no-nonsense approach to working out. Gold's in California is one of the central locations where pro body builders pump up, and at its Boston location, the attitude (if not the fact) pervades.

"We have a large share of muscle-heads here, but we pride ourselves on being a natural gym," says Alex Kabot, a Gold's floor trainer and a junior in exercise physiology at BU. "You'd have a pretty hard time finding steroids here. We're all basically students of exercise physiology, with a couple of pre-med students on hand. There is always someone here trained in CPR." At Gold's, floor trainers like Alex monitor patrons to ensure the proper use of weights and machines. Gold's also focuses on aerobics more than most heavy-weight gyms, with a 2,000 square-foot sprung-wood floor a three-inch range to prevent injury. The cost of membership is a $249 initiation fee and $26 a month. The facility is clean, well maintained, though with a poorly located juice bar at the check-in desk, promoting uncomfortable traffic jams. .

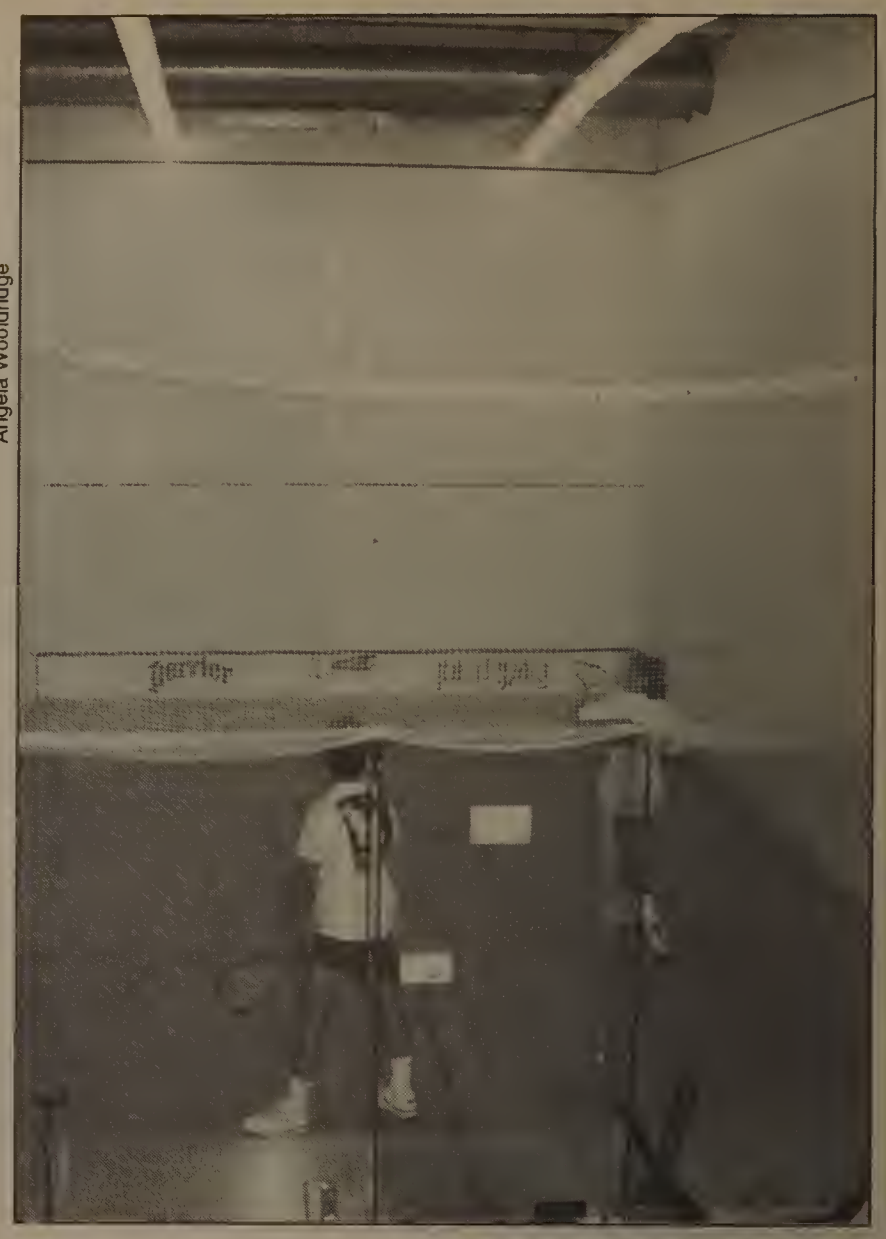
According to Alex, the singles scene is alive and well at Gold's. "From 4 to 7 pm, people hit on each other and stuff and it's quite social. Rumors about who's dating whom tend to fly. From 8 to, we close at ten, though, it's pretty quiet, with the same ten people working out."

Fitcorp is another story. Just as corporate as its name implies, the club has high standards that must be maintained in order for the club to keep its corporate subscribers and health-plan affiliations. Out of 14 fitness centers, only six are open to the public. "Gillette is a good example," says Fitcorp senior VP, CFO and de facto director of marketing, Bob Schwartz. "There's a safety razor plant along the expressway with a 5,000 sq. ft. fitness center there that's only for Gillette employees. They pay us on contract basis to manage the center on their behalf." Other managed-centers include the Boston Company, John Hancock, Rockport Shoe, and the prestigious law firm Hale and Dorr.

"Even with the centers that are open to the public," Schwartz notes, the vast majority of our members join through a program sponsored by their employer or by their HMO. Through employer payment, we offer a reduced fee access to our fitness centers and a variety of health-enhancement programs. It might be smoking cessation, stress management, cancer awareness. We are distributors for the products of Johnson & Johnson Health Management and their package of wellness programs. We provide the services and use their materials. Our objective is not just to get people involved in a fitness program, because, typically, you won't see most of the population coming to work out, but we want to get people involved in other health programs as well."

This an objective well-served by the fact that such programs are bottom-line oriented, saving corporate subscribers large sums with reduced health claims and absenteeism. "Fitness works, wellness works. I could fill the room with research on cost-benefit ratios," says Schwartz. "Palmer and Dodge spends less than 4% on our program than what they pay in health insurance. Paying us $40,000. they estimate their savings at $250,000."

At a cost of a $100 initiation fee plus 75 dollar a year (a straight $34 for employees of firm subscribers), Fitcorp is a best buy. The cost includes access to all six public centers. Fitcorp's main Prudential center is clean, well-maintained, with a full range of free-weights, resistance machines (Nautilus, Nordic Track, Polaris, Eagle Cybex), and an exceptionally well-certified and attentive staff. Aerobics goes from belly-busters to low-impact, which many reputable clubs don't even offer any more. An atmosphere of care pervades, albeit a corporate one. Every Fitcorp employee is certified in CPR, which came in handy recently when a 46-year old member suffered a massive heart attack after jogging. "One of our exercise physiologists noticed he didn't look well. He collapsed and CPR was applied in 30 seconds—we have strict emergency procedures which we practice all the time." The man, a Boston Edison employee, was defibrillated on the spot and survived the attack. "He's resting comfortably at Mass General now," says Schwartz.



And as far as the singles element goes, Schwartz gives the standard denial about how members are strictly interested in working out, but you get the feeling that if two people meet at Fitcorp, they might just as well have met at work.

"The thing that differentiates us from other clubs," says Jeff Randall, owner of the Squash Club of Allston, "is the fact that everyone who joins here is sincerely interested in being fit ." He puts it as a sort of "cleaning up for the maid" situation: "Prospective members have asked where they could join in order to get in shape first so that they could join our club. Our aerobics classes are harder than most other classes, more strenuous and people are pushed harder." At $375 for a 6-month squash-less "fitness membership," $600 for the year, or a one-time initiation fee of $375 and $70 per month for full access, the club is both pricey and trendy. The place is decked out like a theater: all the courts have glass backs, the aerobics room and weight-training area are all left open, so you can see as well as be seen. "It immediately involves the members as they come in," comments Randall. "We have a cafe, a growing child-care program, a physical therapy program and eight personal trainers. Although Randall takes issue with certification programs, he points out that the majority of trainers in the fitness center are enrolled in a masters program in exercise physiology, or are studying physical therapy. The staff are all trained exercise physiologists.

The downside is that the locker rooms get a bit tatty at peak times, floor personnel can be inattentive and one member pointed out that, "after 5 pm, there's really not a lot that you can get done in terms of working out." According to Randall, who prides his club on having the best looking membership in Boston, any singles scene at the club occurs in the aerobics classes or on the workout floor. But at 5pm comes the deluge of students, looking not so much to work out, but to hang out.

Atheneum Building offer a business-oriented workout on both sides of the river, where the lunch hour is as much peak time as after 5pm.

In addition to its pools, Jacuzzis and saunas, treadmills, Nautilus and freeweights, Sky Club also offers Life Circuit machines that set the appropriate weight and monitor your progress. "It's very quick, effective and very motivating compared to Nautilus, as it actually tracks you in," says manager Dennis Tatreault. "Our staffing sets us apart—they're very highly motivated, all have degrees in health and fitness and all are exercise physiologists." Sky Club staff is certified by the American College of Sports Medicine and all its aerobic instructors are IDEA certified. "Our members are more demanding than most, and they pay more than most facilities, so we make sure they get more."

One member noted that he had trouble working out, as he was distracted by the number of attractive women "pumping and jumping," but said the singles scene was in decline. A six-week trial membership is $79, a three-month trial is $179 and annual memberships are $925, with no initiation fee.

Cambridge Racquet boasts a full Racquet Sports program, (with softball squash as opposed to hardball) with a pay-as-you-play $10 per hour court fee. "As far as our membership base goes, we're about 50-50," says General Manager Ed Sol. "The average member is 30-40 years old, corporate people working in the Kendall Square area or living in this part of Cambridge. You have to find a quality facility close to home, or you simply won't have time to work out." Concern for members is high; according to Sol, each member's progress is checked and if someone isn't attending, that member is contacted by the club to find out why and correct the problem. The facility is clean, well maintained (despite heavy traffic on all three levels), and a towel service is offered to members, as well as everything in the locker room you may need to spruce up before going back to work (including blow-dryers). Cambridge Racquet is one of the few clubs to have a circuit of new Nautilus machines, the ones designed to better comport the female form. The club even provides a Gravitron, where you can adjust your body-weight for dips and pull-ups. The only drawback is a mediocre free-weight area, but with free-parking, baby-sitting, wellness programs that include Tufts Associated Health Plan's Lifetrack and a restaurant and lounge, the club's $300 enrollment fee and $68 (less for corporate subscribers) a month dues don't sting too badly. And while it's become a truism that sticking to a workout program is difficult—and though this sampling of clubs is largely exempt—signing up with a decent health club that won't stick it to you is no easy deal either.. ❑

CHANNELING YOUR WORKOUT POTENTIAL

BY GARY S. KADET

If you find yourself pumping more irony than iron at your local health club, and scoff at mainstream approaches to "wellness," which, after all, is a "New Age" concept, something in the alternative mode may be for you. In which case, greater Boston has almost as many holistic avenues available as Marin County California.

"What we offer is Hatha Yoga," says Barbara Benagh of the Yoga Studio at Hill House on Beacon Hill, "which is movement. The way that it differs from aerobics and weight training, which are so popular right now, is that it tries to connect the body and mind in movement. It's more about how you feel than how you look. Some people think it really isn't exercise—but it is! It can be quite strenuous. I call it a ritual of attention: you pay tremendous attention to what you're doing. Because it's not competitive or performance oriented, Yoga does tend to be more complete than most forms of exercise."

A transplanted Tennessean, Benagh has been teaching on Beacon Hill over a decade. Her classes run out of Hill House and are $120 per 11-week-term.

Bill Ryan offers Tai Chi and Taoist Meditation from his Brookline center at $100 per each 7-week course. "Tai Chi originated out to the martial arts about three hundred years ago, which was a combination of Taoist and body practices preparing for spiritual gains with Shao-Lin fighting techniques. What you end up with is an art that's not so much dependent on muscular strength but more on relaxation. We teach it now not for combat, but for health, fitness and relaxation. The core part of it is slowing down the nervous system, slowing down the body in order to become within your body so that you can then learn to move much more quickly." According to Ryan, "If you don't want to join a health club, this is the way to go.

"It calms the mind, the nervous system and opens the body from the inside," which Ryan notes is a way of lengthening the muscles and tissues of the body. "People contract as they get older—a process of shrinking over time. Here, you energize the body. You open it up by making it longer and bigger."

Market Street Health offers a west-coast style spa right here in town. Billing itself as "a center for independent practitioners offering holistic healing through an array of different skills and talents, Market Street offers everything from rolfing to "psychorama." Call Mo-ching Yip for details and prices.

Former New York dancer Joe Gifford of Beacon Hill (and fifth degree Reiki master teacher) offers "The Radiance Technique," the official Reiki program, which, according to Gifford's claims, does everything from balance your physical, emotional, mental and spiritual dimensions, as well as strengthen your immune system. Call 723-6048 for details.

Spas and retreats? New England has some of the best. Angel's Nest of Nantucket offers private accommodations, massage and meditation in "an unstructured atmosphere" (508-228-4898: ask for Pauline Magarone). The Sweet Retreat on Cape Cod offers 2-day and 2-night packages featuring massage and Seichim energy treatments (508-362-9338 ask for Jane Atwood). The Vineyard Retreat at the Tisbury Inn, open year round, features off-peak rates, exercise classes, individual health services and health club facilities for those not entirely disenchanted with the mainstream (1-800-332-4112).

For an additional, comprehensive guide to holistic health in general, Earth Star/Whole Life New England, the Journal for "Personal And Planetary Health, is an excellent resource—available free of charge at most health-food stores.

With so much chicanery afoot in the mainstream health industry, your inner adult might actually find its best bet in what remains locally of the "human potential" or "New Age" movement. ❑

Hero
"Irrepressibly Cute"

Stephen Frears' cynical comedy is irrepressibly cute and doesn't have the bite of his earlier films (The Grifters, Dangerous Liasons). But it's an illuminating glimpse at the way the press and public loosely conspire to thrust the illustrious epithet of the film's title onto whomever they choose. Dustin Hoffman plays Bernie LaPlante, a grubby, two-bit thief who, against his "professional" instincts, risks his life by anonymously rescuing several passengers trapped in a downed plane. One is a prize-winning television journalist (Geena Davis), who coincidentally is on the lookout for a story worthy of LaPlante's heroics. She and her colleagues put into motion a search - along with a million dollar reward - for the mysterious hero. A handsome and homeless veteran (Andy Garcia) steps forward as the much-sought-after risk taker, and LaPlante is sent to prison for trafficking in stolen goods, unable to claim his reward. Will the real hero be revealed? J.S.

WIND
"How the Cup Was Won"

Wind, the story of how the United States lost the America's Cup to the Aussies and won it back, contains all the formulaic elements of a good time at the movies, but if you don't know your jib from your mizzenmast, most of the sailing jargon will breeze past you. Matthew Modine plays Parker, the famous fumbler who lost for the U.S. the first time, and Jennifer Grey plays his ex-partner and girlfriend who will help him take back the Cup. Modine rarely looks as if he wants the Cup back - it's even more questionable if he wants the woman back; Grey hands in the better performance. Skillful shots of dueling ships on the high seas is impressive, and the road to the inevitable ending - America wins big - is swift and sleek. A good movie. T.S.L.

A BRIEF HISTORY OF TIME
"Heroic and Sensitive Homage"

Similar in name only to the best-selling book, A Brief History of Time is a documentary about the life and ideas of the physicist Stephen Hawking, a leading authority on the workings of the universe. The details of his life are interwoven with selected cursory discussions of concepts from the book, such as black holes and the big bang theory. In effect, we are presented with an heroic, sensitive homage to a brilliant, resilient scientist who was stricken with a disabling and degenerative muscular disease while in college. Unhappily, Time's forcefulness is fragile. Hawking appears throughout and communicates only with the aid of a computer, is nonetheless eloquent: his thoughts range from his childhood to the fate of the universe, and thus capture the expansive quality of the universe he studies. J.S.

SINGLE WHITE FEMALE
"Doesn't Keep Her Promise"

Allison Jones (Bridget Fonda) kicks her boyfriend out of her huge rent-controlled apartment in New York and finds herself Hedra (Jennifer Jason Leigh), the Roommate From Hell in Single White Female. With everything that the movie has going for it (esteemed director, high-voltage acting talent in Leigh and Fonda), it is a pity that Female falls short of being a taut, spooky, psychological thriller. By its end, Female has deteriorated into just another slasher film, with Leigh's character wandering around armed with knives and hooks. Director Barbet Schroeder seems so bent on filming a commercial slasher film that he shoots past the rich underbelly which the audience really wants. B.S.

Another Flawed New World Order

BY TIM LEMIRE

In 1492: The Conquest of Paradise, director Ridley Scott suffers a similar fate to his subject, Columbus. Having returned to Spain from the New World, Columbus paints a rich picture to the nobility of the natural beauties of the New World. "But," interrupts one royal, "what about the gold?"

Watching 1492, with its splendid visual imagery, one might ask, "But what about the plot?" Screenwriter Roselyne Bosch takes us on a slow boat to the New World, weighed down by Scott's heavy-handed symbolism.

Christopher Columbus (Gerard Depardieu) leads his men ashore in "1492: Conquest of Paradise"

Visually, 1492, like the New World, is rich in color and texture, but there isn't enough gold to make it sell.

If you know your history, or if you watched public television's Columbus: The Age of Discovery, there is little more 1492 adds to the Columbus story; it even glosses over some facts, such as Pinta captain Pinzon's departure from the two other ships to find gold for himself, or the fact that once in the New World, Columbus wrote to Queen Isabella recommending the natives be brought back as slaves. We see Gerard Depardieu as Columbus looking on with horror as native slaves are led away to Europe; small wonder, since Scott and Bosch do everything they can to play up the Christ/Columbus motif.

Such a parallel would be acceptable if Scott did not have Depardieu in bare feet, turning over tables in a monastery, and riding a mule. For her part, Bosch has characters directly call Columbus a prophet and messiah until you want to say Okay, I got it. Lightning striking a wooden cross, natives crucified by nobles, it's disappointingly obvious.

We follow Columbus from his initial voyage to the New World throughout the failed attempt to maintain peace with the natives. Columbus wants peace in his New World Order, but the natives know what the Europeans want. "We admire your people," Columbus tells a native chief, who in turn replies, "I know you admire our gold and our women." Columbus here is innocent Adam in his Eden, undone by the corruptness of his counterparts, the gold-hungry, blood-thirsty noblemen who wish to beat Columbus' ploughshares into swords.

Regrettably, the movies lumbers along and truly feels two and a half hours long. With an unrelenting score by Vangelis (a cross between The Mission, Peter Gabriel's Passion, and an Ernest and Julio Gallo commercial), 1492 inundates with images and sound, under which the script cannot rise.

As far as performances go, Armand Assante plays a black-bearded court statesman named Sanchez with brimming menace and power. Sigourney Weaver is a lackluster Queen Isabella; with so little time onscreen, her role may as well qualify as a cameo, and she does not appear to take advantage of what little time she has to make her performance an above-average one. Of all the performers, Gerard Depardieu stands alone as Columbus, entirely believable, sometimes exaggerated, but always thoughtful and sensitive.

Queen Isabella calls the New World expedition "a disaster;" Ridley Scott's movie of that expedition is hardly that - it is a marvelous sensual experience - but like mines in the New World that have come up short on wealth, one feels that the drama and tragedy of Columbus' "conquest of paradise" has not been sufficiently mined of its power, its pathos or its overwhelming impact on two hemispheres. ❑

The Public Eye

BY TIM LEMIRE

When we first see freelance photographer Leon Bernstein (self-proclaimed "The Great Bernzini") at work in The Public Eye, he is standing over a murdered man. Bernstein's camera explodes with brilliant flash bulb light (this is the '40s, folks), then Bernstein moves an arm and shifts a leg: we learn that the shabby shutterbug is no ordinary snapshooter, but an aspiring photo-artist with an aesthetic eye.

In a fitting role and a fine performance, Joe Pesci plays the squat and fast talking Bernzy, and evokes all that is appealing about The Public Eye: '40s-style drama and lingo with the touch of an artist. Director Howard Franklin (who also wrote the screenplay) incorporates keen visual imagery into the movie - a flair for shadows and visceral textures - making The Public Eye entertaining to watch.

Joe Pesci stars as Leon Bernstein whose single-minded devotion to getting just the right picture inspired him to turn the trunk of his car into a mobile darkroom.

An example of Franklin's ear for noir-movie dialogue comes when a night club doorman describes how Bernstein's ilk are looked upon by cops and mobsters alike: as vermin with cameras or ambulance chasers out for a fast buck. "You know what a shutterbug does when he finds an abandoned baby?" the doorman asks. "He jabs it with a diaper pin 'cause a picture of a cryin' baby gets a dollar more."

Like Rick in Casablanca, Bernstein is an isolationist in the midst of a world war: he doesn't like to do people favors or become too involved in their lives - but then a woman comes along, this time in the comely figure of Kay Lovitz (Barbara Hershey), a nightclub owner who possesses a wardrobe of revealing evening gowns. Smitten with her, Bernstein, like Bogart, is drawn into a plot involving the Mob, the FBI and a national security crisis.

The opportunities to help Kay and take smashing photographs jell together with a nice balance that leaves us wondering if Bernstein cares more about pictures than the people behind them (is he an opportunist or an artist).

Barbara Hershey brings some depth to her character Kay Lovitz, a society gal who secretly feels out of place and unwanted among her well-to-do clientele, but ultimately her unmoving performance isn't enough to make us feel for, pity, adore or root for her.

Pesci, meanwhile, is a lovable runt, playing Bernstein with an understated thoughtfulness and sensitivity (a departure from his ranting roles in JFK and Goodfellas). Bernstein is by no means Pesci's best performance, but it is solid proof that he can hold more than just the role of supporting actor.

Sometimes the plot of The Public Eye may leave you asking, "Wait - explain that part to me again?" But a movie that sets your left hemisphere to work while your right side enjoys the pictures, is certainly welcome .❑

GLENGARRY GLEN ROSS
"Lethal Barrage of Words"

This excellent cinematic adaptation of David Mamet's 1984 Pulitzer Prize-winning play loses none of the original's brutal power. It centers on four salesmen (superbly played by Jack Lemmon, Al Pacino, Ed Harris and Alan Arkin) who sell worthless real estate. When the jobs of two are threatened and their valuable customer leads are stolen, their survival instincts go into overdrive. Mamet's jeering, nonsermonizing screenplay is a lethal barrage of words, whose target is free enterprise, American-style. Every character is depraved, and although the salesmen-protagonists are hucksters, Mamet has less antipathy toward them than toward the other principals. One of the most strangely telling scenes has Jack Lemmon smoothly conveying the details of a close to an engrossed Al Pacino. J.S.

SCHOOL TIES
"A Poignant Shut-Out Story"

Set in the '50s, School Ties is a predictable but still unsettling story of anti-Semitism at a prep school for boys. David Green (Brendon Fraser of Encino Man), who arrives in Cabot, Massachusetts, from Scranton, PA (strike one), works in the cafeteria to help pay his way through St. Matthew's Academy (strike two), and has problems fitting in with the Old Boy network because he's Jewish (strike three). The conflicts David encounters at St. Matthew's give a pronounced look at a time when words like "sheeny" and phrases like "I jewed him down" were prevalent. Brendan Fraser plays David with ease and sensitivity, while his classmates look and act like extras from Dead Poets Society. School Ties may have taken place years ago, but the prejudice persists today, making the film highly relevant. T.S.L.

CROSSING THE BRIDGE
"A Bad Trip"

Crossing the Bridge is a lame coming-of-age drama about the high school losers who you didn't care about in school and probably won't care about now. Danny, Tim and Mort are three lads who have been out of school for three years, keeping busy drinking and sleeping late, when the opportunity arises to make money smuggling pot over the Canadian border. There are mud football games, lost loves, fat uncles and dumb lines. Writer Mike Bender taps the collective unconscious of urban adolescence in the same way TV's The Wonder Years panders to the lowest common denominator of childhood experience. The results are cliché and as boring to watch as a slow night on TV. The plot lumbers along like the boy's old blue Buick, and in the end you feel like you've been taken for a ride. T.S.L.

MR. BASEBALL
"Strikes Out"

Tom Selleck plays the eponymously nicknamed character. A major leaguer with the Yankees, he's in a slump and contractually forced to spend an unspecified period of time playing for a Japanese baseball team. Selleck is self-centered and disrespectful in an amiable sort of way - a cartoonish caricature of the West. His sensibilities are intolerable not only to the team but also to a hard-nosed coach (Ken Takakura) and his daughter (Aya Takanashi). The resulting conflict makes for a bleak comedy. A gooey parable about international harmony, Mr. Baseball is a movie whose heart seems to be in the right place, but is so shallow that it doesn't even get to first base. Directed by Fred Schepisi. J.S.

HUSBANDS AND WIVES
"Dial 911 for Psychotherapy"

By now you've heard that Woody Allen's latest is not about the author/director chasing nearly-underage women but about how the breakup of one couple affects everyone around them. After their best friends divorce almost capriciously, Woody and Mia begin to take their problems seriously. Woody's attention is drawn to one his students (Juliette Lewis), a young woman whose confidence and vivid sexuality have brought even her psychotherapist to his knees. Judy Davis is spectacular, Mia looks like she's in Rosemary's Baby 2, and the lines the screenwriter has penned for her are not kind. The unsteady and uncontrolled camerawork of the piece are its greatest weaknesses. In numerous scenes, the characters are miked and interviewed, but it not clear who is doing the interviewing or even why it's being done. B.C.

M

In The Public Eye With Howard Franklin

BY TIM LEMIRE

Howard Franklin, a tall thirtysomething fellow with oval spectacles, is particularly low-key talking about his film The Public Eye, which marks his debut as both writer and director. One gets the feeling about Franklin that if he can't say something in fewer than a dozen words, he's being long-winded. To the question, "What brought you to Boston?" Franklin replies with a curt answer straight out of A Hard Day's Night: "An airplane."

Franklin's previous screenwriting credits include the comedy Quick Change, which he co-directed with star Bill Murray, Someone to Watch Over Me and The Name of the Rose. Speaking rather obliquely, Franklin said of writing, "It's something you either have or you don't."

With more prodding, he elaborated: "I think writing is probably the easiest way [to break into the movie business] because you don't have to be hired to do it, you can do it at home. It's just a matter of hanging out and being persistent until you do get in."

Franklin, an L.A. native, has written scripts for 12 years but never attended film school; he considers Quick Change "a very expensive film school" and the movie with which he is the most satisfied. Not to underestimate the importance of The Public Eye, Franklin pointed out that the film not only marks his debut as a director, but also Joe Pesci's debut as a lead actor.

"You don't notice that right away," says Franklin, "that Joe has never carried a movie as a lead. I think it's long overdue. He was keenly aware of that. He said, 'It's a very important movie for you, and it's a very important movie for me.'" Although Franklin wrote the script for The Public Eye five years ago, the director says Pesci was the first actor that came to his mind for the lead.

In The Public Eye, Pesci plays Leon "Bernzy" Bernstein, an ace freelance photographer and aspiring photography artist in the '40s who becomes mired in a devious plot involving the FBI, the Mafia, and international conspirators.

As pleased as he is with the final product, Franklin says that The Public Eye "wasn't a lot of fun to make."

"It was all shot at night, and we didn't have any money," says Franklin, "but we were all miserable together, which is better than being miserable alone." When asked why the film, which takes place in New York, was shot mostly in Cincinnati, he says the reason was money. "It was a non-union film," Franklin says, "and it's very hard to shoot a non-union film in New York."

Of his latest projects, Franklin remained taciturn, adding that he doesn't know how writing projects are going to end up once he's begun: "You know, E. L. Doctorow said that writing a novel is like driving across the country at night: you can only see as far as the headlights go. But by the time five days have passed, you've gone from New York to Los Angeles."

The Public Eye opens from New York to Los Angeles this week. ❑

BOOKS

BY LISA M. BONNELL

"THE EASY WAY OUT"

Stephen McCauley
Simon & Schuster, 1992

From the first sentence of "The Easy Way Out," the refreshingly wry voice of Stephen McCauley's latest character, Patrick O'Neil, speaks. O'Neil, a homosexual male living in Cambridge circa 1990, tells the tale of his family's foibles. McCauley's first book, "The Object of My Affection" (1990), introduced a fool-hearted narrator, George, not unlike Patrick, who lived in New York City.

This time, in "The Easy Way Out," the lead male is a lazy travel agent who "forgets" to book trips for clients who schedule months in advance. Flanked with another cast of wacky characters, this book is rich in wit and wisdom. None of the people can force themselves to make the life decisions that are necessary for their happiness. Instead, they bumble along, compounding their problems.

Patrick's manipulative parent's trick their son Tony into cementing an unstable engagement. Late one night he calls Patrick, who is awake suffering from insomnia caused by an unfulfilling relationship with Arthur, his live-in lover. Tony's calls come nightly as he tells of his star-crossed love affair with Vivian while engaged to Loreen. Patrick highly romanticizes the affair in his mind to make up for his lackluster love life.

Meanwhile, his older brother Ryan, who his parents alternately call "the poor slob" and "the saint," manages the O'Neil's dying clothing store business. He occupies the parent's basement while brooding over a marriage three years dead.

As Patrick narrates through the book, each statement of fact is followed quickly by a beat of sharp wit that drives the point home with a chuckle. "My parents were now, and always have been inseparable. They only spend time apart when my father's in the hospital, which probably explains why he's had so much surgery..."

As McCauley's comedic portrayal of the "Only Connect" travel agency continues, Sharon, Patrick's best friend (the pathological lying travel agent who falsifies tickets, vouchers and receipts) scams. "She thought of herself as the foot soldier in a people's revolution against big business."

Patrick remains fixated on everybody's problems but his own. He avoids the fact that his lover Arthur is pursuing him to cosign a thirty year mortgage on a yellow house he doesn't even like. What little thought he gives to Arthur he spends devising elaborate escapes like moving to Australia.

Patrick's characterization is complete: his exercised but thin body that bikes by the Charles River at midnight, his cluttered Yugo and his hopelessly brilliant red hair. Every description is clear, his voice so crisp as if he were standing in the room nonchalantly cracking comments about life and the environment.

Yet, he twists the serious into the sublime. Under all this ridiculousness there is a point. Patrick's comments fly like barbs through the story, as he fantasizes about global warming and Republican politics: "Tony had enrolled in one of the many business schools that sprang up in the area shortly after Ronald Reagan began his eight year nap in the White House."

He addresses the environment, alternative lifestyles and AIDS. "I did want a home, some safe and reliable shelter from the heat and disease and the madness of the whole dying world." These comments come quick, with a laugh, but with lasting cynicism.

"The Easy Way Out" is a story about indecisiveness and hard decisions in the quest for love in a meaningful life. ❑

EXCERPTS FROM "INSIDE THE OUTHOUSE"

The Story of The Stools

BY ALLEN CARTER

In an exclusive excerpt from his new book, "Inside the Outhouse," Allen Carter reveals the secrets, tragedies and heartbreak encountered by the world's greatest rock and roll band - The Stools. With their post-concert escape acts now legendary, the band shares the stories behind the wild years of womanizing and substance abuse which led to some of the most treasured songs in American rock history.

Bo Stol, bassist for America's Greatest Garage Band, The Stools, slides into the backseat of the limo with me and Betsy, the band's media handler. He is tall. His cowboy boots make him even more so. His hair is big and wet, still sweating from the show. We had hung out in the cavernous backstage area of Denver's Capacious Dome until the record weasels and other lampreys had finished off the free beer; now the band wanted to make a quick run for their hotel.

Elvin, Cosmo and Antonio, the three founding members, took the first limo with Al Floss, their long time manager. Bolt and Creacha took the second, with three unnamed members of Dutcho Record's staff. That left Bolt, Betsy and I alone in the last limo.

The first two cars made it out before the fans that had gathered in the parking lot knew what was going on, but unfortunately, they made out Bo's big hair through the tinted glass of our Lincoln and the chase was on.

Our driver was frantically trying to keep pace with the other two limos, but a fan's Pinto, sporting a "Stools Rule" bumper sticker, had managed to cut us off from the herd. We were flanked on both sides and behind by more of the faithful hanging from their windows, hoping to catch a glimpse of Bo.

Later, when we were safely back at the hotel and telling this story to the rest of the band, Elvin Anderson quipped, "What do you expect, the Grateful Dead's fans are Deadheads, Jimmy Buffet's fans are Parrotheads, so it would only follow that the Stool's fans would have to be Shitheads!" But all Bo had to say about them at the moment was "Well, they're sure determined."

To our right, on the shoulder of the road, a jeep full of girls had begun to lean dangerously close to our ear as both drivers raced at breakneck speed. "We might as well give 'em a thrill," Bo said as he rolled down the window and reached out to them. The driver of the jeep, no longer looking at the road, was half out of her seat as she tried to pass a T-shirt to Bo.

We were now only a few blocks from the hotel, where the rest of the band were wading through the crowd that had been waiting all night by the door. As luck would have it, not fifty yards from the hotel you must go under an overpass, and the shoulder of the road disappears into a wall of steel re-enforced concrete. The driver of the jeep, still trying to pass the shirt to Bo, was blissfully unaware of this as she plowed headlong into the wall.

A sickening dull crash of twisted metal and human carnage filled the Denver night air. Bo sat back in his seat and said, "that had to hurt," as he rolled the electric window up.

As our car pulled up to the front of the hotel, the stunned crowd peacefully parted, and a quick thinking Al Floss sent two of his entourage running towards the wreck.

"Do they know any first-aid?" I asked.

"I don't know," the rotund Floss answered. "But I want them to check and see if those girls had tickets to tomorrow night's show. We could resell them. The show's sold out you know."

CRAWLING FROM THE WRECKAGE

In 1980, a virtually unknown garage band played in the U.S. for the first time at a small nightclub in Scituate Harbor as a warm-up act. I didn't get to see them. I was a volunteer answering the phones for the overnight show at WBCN in Boston, and I didn't own a car. Twelve years later, The Stools embarked on a massive tour of America's biggest stadiums, shamelessly plugging their seventh album, "Barnyard Machismo," and I was along for the ride (after conning a couple of foreigners into footing my bill while I wrote this book).

The night of The Stools' first American gig sticks out in my mind because, as I settled into my lonely vigil at the WBCN phones (about the same time they were getting off stage), the requests started pouring in. Call after call asking for songs by The Stools. Odd titles like "Love It When You Lie," "Lay Some Pipe" and "Show Us Your Tits." Person after person called, saying that they were just leaving the show and wanted to hear more of The Stools as they drove home.

I went to the jock that was on the air, and asked if he knew anything about this band. He just threw an empty beer bottle at me, told me never to come in to his air-studio when he was working, and turned around to vomit onto his own crotch. Years later he became a well-respected newscaster at channel Four, so he'll remain nameless here.

I returned to the phones and took another forty-three calls for Stools' songs that night. During an interview on WBCN in 1989, I told Antonio Moretti about how I had first come to know The Stools. He laughed and told me that it wasn't the fans that had been calling. It was the band, drunk and depressed because the club's manager had stiffed them on their cut of the door. They stole his wallet and placed over fifty calls to WBCN on his credit card, along with three calls to Japan, one to Des Moine, Iowa and a pair of boots from L.L. Bean.

But back on that lonely night in 1980, I thought I had been party to the birth of a legend. I took what was left of a check I had received for a donation of my blood and headed off to Hot Poop, a hip record store in Harvard Square in search of The Stool's album. I felt that if I could be the one to break this new band to WBCN, that would be my ticket off of the "Listener Line" and into a full time gig with the music department.

The clerk at Hot Poop didn't have the album. In fact, he had never heard of the band, which was just as well, as I had lost all of my money to a Three Card Monte at a T station con booth. This temporary setback only served to strengthen my resolve to be the man that brought The Stools to WBCN. They had become my Grail. ❑

For our readers who don't yet realize that this excerpt is simply a spoof of WBCN's The Stools, we recommend that a search in your favorite bookstore for "Inside The Outhouse" be abandoned in favor of a more productive activity.

Breaking Legs Charms Boston

Karen Valentine and Vincent Gardenia in "Breaking Legs"
Tom Dulack's Comedy Hit

BY MARY SHEPPARD-EARON

Breaking Legs, with its golden cast of seasoned comedians, immediately and completely swept its opening night audience off its feet. In the play, three Italian restaurant owners, Lou, Mike, and Tino, decide to finance a play written by a waspy New England college professor/playwright. The professor also happens to be the love interest of Angie, Lou's daughter, and a former student of the professor's in college.

The opening scene between Lou (Vincent Gardenia) Graziano and his pretty, pert daughter Angie (Karen Valentine) is snappy with quick, clever dialogue that quickly positions the play. Karen Valentine (the female gender's Dick Clark) looks as beautiful as ever and is a pleasure to behold on stage. In contrast to her cool togetherness as Italian princess Angie, is Vince Gardenia's hysterically stereotyped portrayal of an older Italian family man who reacts emotionally with hands, body and voice. Gardenia, whose credits include All in the Family and Moonstruck, holds a funny and lovable mass appeal, reminding one of the Italian in all of us.

Gary Sandy (WKRP in Cincinnati) is cast perfectly as professor Terence O'Keefe. Relatively speaking, he portrays an element of saneness in this cast of zanies. But Professor O'Keefe has his own character quirks and the audience soon begins to wonder if he is ultimately going to "beat 'em or join 'em."

Lou and Angie are hard to resist as they lead the Professor to a table and feed him plates of food. When Lou informs the Professor of the likelihood that he and his "friends" will finance him, the Professor gets excited and reacts in amazement. Here, Gary Sandy portrays the genius as a bumbling, believing, honest-to-goodness innocent; one who has never really experienced anything outside of campus and academics. There is this moment of giddy excitement and anticipation that envelops the audience and suddenly, in walk Mike and Tino. At this point, one realizes the intense and rapid pace of John Tillinger's direction.

Joseph Mascolo, who plays Mike Francisco, immediately takes over the stage. Beginning his career as a concert clarinetist, Mascolo's vocals are deep and rich and projective. Although not an extremely tall man, Mascolo's chest size alone is enough to make him a formidable presence on stage.

Mike Francisco immediately establishes himself as the Godfather of the three men. While Professor O'Keefe's naiveté dissipates, Angie brings out food and wine to "Uncle Mike," as Tino sits in cold non-committance, puffing on a cigar. As the Professor bumbles and bites his lip, he nervously reveals the plot of the play to be about murder. The audience roars and the professor learns that he has written about a subject familiar to Mike, Tino and Lou.

The door opens and in slinks Frankie Salvucci (Larry Storch). Moving like a beaten dog, Frankie positions himself on a chair while buying time on a loan and puffing nervously on a cigarette. Storch is brilliant as an ill-kempt and nervous street dog, with a posture and carriage evident of an abused life. Mike reassures Frankie that he can take his time paying back the money, but when Frankie leaves and Tino follows, we know we're not going to see him again. The professor is stammering and wide-eyed. When Mike and Lou leave him alone in the booth, he gets crazy with fear. Meanwhile, there is cute little Angie strutting about and waving her tail at him, enticing him to stay in the game as she is part of the stakes.

The pace of Breaking Legs never quits. In fact, it gets livelier. There are carefully planned and effective twists in the script that are well thought out. The dialogue is witty, kooky, fast and straight-on and provides a close to Breaking Legs that may not have been entirely realistic but was definitely pleasing to the characters and audience (and certainly worth drinking a toast of Anisette, which they did).

The audience gave the cast a pleased and enthusiastic reception, and left the Wilbur Theater feeling satisfied

In looking around at the smiles and laugher, however, this reviewer wishes she hadn't set such high expectations. It would have been nice to have left feeling as delighted as everyone else. ❑

Breaking Legs runs at the Wilbur Theater through October 18.

For only a $2 donation, visitors can explore many wonderful exhibits that you don't have to be a rocket scientist to appreciate. First, there's "Crazy After Calculus: Humor at MIT," which chronicles some of the best college pranks ever committed. For the more science-minded, there's "MathSpace," a hands-on exploration of geometry that lets you tinker with math playthings.

Museum of Fine Arts
465 Huntington Ave., Boston
MFA presents "To Weave for the Sun: Andean Textiles" through Nov. 15. Representing almost 2,500 years, this exhibition of 50 Andean textiles from the permanent collection presents a chronological overview of Pre-Columbian and Colonial period textiles.

For those into contemporary art, the MFA houses a traveling exhibition devoted to Jackie Winsor until Nov. 1. Her "human-scaled" sculptures are made in a variety of materials— rope, cement, brick and wood.

"The Lure of Italy" features American and European paintings from the 17th through the 19th centuries depicting Italian scenes. The paintings will be drawn from the renowned permanent collection at the MFA. Through Dec. 13.

Museum of Science
Science Park, Boston
Three exciting new exhibits open in October: "Star Trek: Federation Science" (Oct. 3- Jan. 3); "BodyTech: The Science Behind Medicine" (Oct. 3- Dec. 30); and "Antarctica" (Oct. 5- Jan. 10). In "Star Trek," discover the world of space travel with more than 30 interactive displays incorporating today's real science technology with the fantastic vision of the future portrayed in the movie. "BodyTech" lets you explore how the human body works, and how medical science helps when it doesn't. "Antarctica" is a companion exhibition to the Omnimax movie of the same name.

Museum of Transportation
Larz Anderson Park

Fashion Trends Making Headlines

BY MARY LAWLOR

This season there are more men's fashion trends than ever. And lots of them are fun. You may want to check them out. These are the elements that add zing to a tired wardrobe and update your overall image. Most of the things are affordable and bound to work with what's in your closet. Don't underestimate their importance. Here they are:

• DENIM - The craze for denim continues - jeans, jackets, shirts, shorts, etc. Denim shirts are making big news.

• VESTS - The non-matching, odd vest is teaming with sportswear. The leather vests are selling like hotcakes.

• SWEATERS - Sweaters are strong this season and popping up in ribbed cardigans and patterned crew necks.

• SUSPENDERS - Patterned silk suspenders (with Leather trim) are being shown in 1 1/2 inch widths. Great for the guy who always takes his jacket off - such as TV's Larry King.

• BELTS - Leather belts in both narrow and wide widths are on the scene. Some feature big buckles in such metals as silver.

• SHOES - Watch for the suede penny saddle slip-on as well as moccasin-like shoes with brass buckles. Shoes are chunkier this fall.

• BOOTS - The Western harness boot is the biggie this season. It looks great with jeans. Make this one a must.

• TIES - Hand-painted silk neckties are at the top of the list.
Some are like works of art.

• HOSE - Solids have given way to snappy socks in diamonds, dots, herringbone patterns and more.

• CAPS - Small visored black caps are worn with much of the sportswear styles

• SUNGLASSES - Round metal sunglasses are outselling all other styles at the moment.

FIGS

So Good You'll Never Want to Leaf

BY MEG WORDEN AND MARCUS G. APICIUS

OK, so it's unfair to review a restaurant the second night it's open, but hey, this is the Improper Bostonian after all. And anyway, we had such a good time that it seemed irrelevant that Figs was little more than a newborn. The address may seem familiar, and that's because this is where Olive's used to be before they moved to bigger premises. The restaurant layout is familiar, too; the bar is still on the left, and the open kitchen sits at the back. But now the walls are black, and the tables have red and white tablecloths.

Figs is the latest brainchild of Todd and Olivia English, and although it may call itself a pizzeria, there is no way it can be compared to your standard pepperoni pizza parlour. For a start, the toppings are not your conventional ones, and after seeing the pizzas, you'll immediately know that this experience will be like no other.

The night we ate there, Todd English had decided that pizzas should be oval rather than round - an interesting concept that caused all kinds of amusing chaos when the staff tried to actually serve the pizzas (they didn't fit the standard serving platters). It remains to be seen if this idea works out. And rather than putting the pizzas directly on the table, spiral metal stands are used to raise the pizza about a foot above the table - an ingenious idea that helps save space.

From the list of ten pizzas, we chose two, and they couldn't have been more different. One was the fresh fig and prosciutto with rosemary ($10.00), and the other, grilled mushroom ($11.00). Both came with thin crusts, but that was their only similarity. The one with figs and prosciutto was surely designed to be the signature dish of the restaurant. It was very unusual in that it had no sauce (it takes a very confident, not to mention skilled, chef to make a pizza crust designed to be eaten "dry"); instead, the crust incorporated bits of rosemary. We liked this feature of the crust so much that we wished the rosemary were spread more evenly, rather than appearing here and there. The prosciutto was a delicate, mild variety, rather than the heavily salted kind, and went wonderfully with the luscious quartered fresh figs that were scattered abundantly everywhere. The other pizza had a cheese base and was covered with chunky slices of out-of-this-world grilled portobello mushrooms, along with enough grilled onions to provide a counterpoint without overwhelming the flavor. It's hard to say which one we preferred. We also found that the thickness of the crusts was a little uneven, but we enjoyed it both ways. Incidentally, these pizzas are outrageously big, and we noticed that there was a brisk take-home trade among the sated customers.

Angela Wooldridge

Among the other pizzas are white clam ($15.00), fried calamari and spicy red sauce ($12.50) and four onion and goat cheese ($12.50), to name but a few. We can hardly wait to come back to try these, too.

While pizza is the main feature at Figs, there are some other menu items that merit serious consideration. There is antipasto ($3.95), green salad ($3.95) and a selection of five pastas ranging from the familiar (spaghetti bolognese) to more unusual (shells with shrimp, creamy spinach and beans).

The antipasto was the typical Italian kind with a combination of grilled vegetables (fennel, zucchini, red peppers), chicken liver pate on crostini, olives, beans, croutons...you get the idea. To be honest, we would have preferred a greater emphasis on the grilled vegetables, like they do in the Abruzzi part of Italy.

From the pastas, we chose the orrechiette with rabe ($8.95), which arrived at the table exuding a glorious garlic aroma that made our knees go weak. From the first taste, we thought we'd died and gone to heaven. This dish was designed for lovers of fine quality olive oil and garlic, and is destined to be one of our all-time favorites. The pasta name means "little ears," (due to its shape), and it was perfectly adapted for holding the divine garlic-olive oil sauce. Add to this the bitter counterpoint of the broccoli rabe, a vegetable that we don't find nearly often enough, and you have a simple pasta dish that's as close to perfect as you'll ever get.

The few desserts are listed on a blackboard. We tried a tiramisu, which was far from traditional, having a grainy, almost cornmeal texture to it, but very pleasant nonetheless. We also tried a very delicious and refreshing cantaloupe sorbet accompanied by some outstanding biscotti.

The wine list is small but well thought out, with prices ranging from $12.50-$25.00. Beer ("Olive's Ale") can be had by the glass or the pitcher.

In a place as small as this, there is no getting away from feeling crowded, and thanks to the relatively large tables, reaching some of the wall seating requires the ability of a skilled contortionist.

But with food like this, Todd and Olivia English surely have another hit on their hands, and we can say without reservation that they deserve it. ❑

Food and Wine "Putting It All Together"

BY JONATHON ALSOP

A couple of years ago, winemaker Bill Russell from Westport Rivers Vineyard in Westport MA, had a message on his answering machine: "If this is an emergency, remember... red wine with meat, white wine with fish. Wait for the tone." Bill's tongue was way in cheek, of course, since his advice just barely scratched the surface. Sure, red wine "goes" with meat and white wine "goes" with fish, but every now and then, you'll hit on a food/wine combination that's immensely greater than the sum of its parts.

Conventional wisdom has much to say about what goes with what when all else fails. You can look it up: red meat equals red Bordeaux (California Cabernet Sauvignon), white meat equals white Burgundy (California Chardonnay), white sauce equals Loire Valley (California? forget about it). Italian wine with Italian food. Sauvignon Blanc with seafood and Pinot Noir with lamb. Ice cold beer goes with Chinese, or ice cold Riesling or Gewurztraminer when you must have wine.

Classic food/wine combos illustrate wine's historic role in relation to food, but matching food and wine on a daily basis is a haphazard art - not a science. I often find myself looking at an uncooked dinner and unopened wine, asking myself how to balance out what's on hand. Sometimes the flavors of the food and wine contradict each other. Sometimes they move in the same direction, and eventually meet like two streams. More often than not, the confluence of food and wine produces a third flavor between the two, dissolving back and forth like a movie cross-fade.

Breaking the rules always gets people's attention. Starting the evening with a light, juicy red wine like Beaujolais and progressing to a deep, powerful white Burgundy can work with dinner, but it's a stretch. A big-boned red wine is delicious with tuna "steak" although it flies in the face of tradition. Pizza and Champagne form a great working mis-match of flavor and class distinction.

One cheap trick that guarantees your wine and food match up right is to cook with your dinner wine. I often do up a French dish called (loosely translated) "Twelve Million-Clove of Garlic Chicken" that calls for about 2/3 of a bottle of wine. If it's a special occasion, I spring for an extra bottle of dinner wine, or at least a nice, affordable equivalent. Of course, this trick doesn't have much value in a restaurant, but around the house, it's surefire.

Many restaurants and wine shops host wine dinners and tastings throughout the year. Around the middle of September, Chestnut Hill Wine Cellars on Route 9 near the Mall sold a wine dinner which matched a nice batch of Italian whites and reds with a somewhat soft but straight-ahead menu. The evening was a real crash course in wines: three whites, four reds, then out of left field came a rare French dessert wine. Chestnut Hill's wine dinner was a good introduction to how food and wine are meant to complement each other. As each course grew stronger in flavor, the wines got bigger and bigger, culminating in a beautiful '87 Chianti Classico Riserva "La Selvanella" (a nice buy at $12) with strong cinnamon/clove flavors and soft fruit flavors of raisin and fig.

I recommend such dinners because they're a good venue for learning about food and wine very quickly. Check the listings below for wine dinners as they come up, or call the Improper Bostonian with wine dinner information or suggestions, 617-232-3507 (ph) and 617-232-4305 (fax). ❑

Let's Not Be Silly • Wine, Food & Value

The next time you find yourself responsible for other people's dining pleasure, a few simple rules for fun & feasting. Besides the obvious, what with what, remember dry white's always before red's...

It is also elegant to serve more than one red with the meal. Preferably from the same regions, The younger ones first. And of all the endless combinations of wine and food, do not forget value! Lean on the local merchant. That's why he's in business. We have well informed merchants in the U.S., believe it or not. Plus there are more than several right here in the Back Bay, all ready to help or suggest.

More simple tip. When serving curry or abundantly spicy dishes, try a white wine that will stand up and hold it's own, a Gewurztraminer from Alcase France for one, and never sweet wines with beef. By John O'Riordan

APPETEASERS

BY MARGE CHRISSTOMATIDS & PETER MCNAMARA

I'D LOVE TO LICK YOUR RIBS

The smoke may have dissipated from the Great Yankee Rib Cook-Off, but the memory of a great four days lingers on. Word is that there was even talk of holding it over for an additional day. One thing is for sure - it's going to be an annual event. For those of you who didn't manage to catch the final results of the competition, the winners were as follows: The $10,000 prize and title of Best Damn Yankee Ribs went to the Commonwealth Brewing Company, with second and third places going to Tex's BBQ Express (of Roslindale) and the Loading Zone. The Best Damn Rebel Ribs title was won by Bibbs Barbeque (from Florida), with Johnson's Barbeque (from Virginia) and Cowboys Barbeque (from Texas) coming second and third. Other competitions were open to all restaurants, and guess what, New England restaurants won every category. The Porterhouse Cafe won Best Sauce, followed by Billy Bones (of Michigan) and Cowboys. The Original Sports Saloon outdid everyone by winning no fewer than three categories: Best Chicken, Best Pulled Pork and they had a runaway victory with the People's Choice Award for the best ribs. Our congratulations to all participants.

A GOURMET'S DELIGHT

Good news about Savenor's. The Boston branch at 160 Charles Street will open in time for Thanksgiving. There will, of course, be a full butcher's shop, plus all the other great items we have come to expect. There will also be free (yes, free!) parking for one hour in the adjacent garage. Cantabridgians: don't despair. Savenor's will be opening up in the old Broadway Supermarket (468 Broadway) come March. For updated information, call 547-1765.

DON'T QUIT YOUR WINING

One of Cambridge's best kept secrets is the excellent wine selection at the Cambridge branch of Bread & Circus. Now is a good time to check this out, as there is a wine sale running through October, with a 10% discount on six bottles, and 15% on 12 bottles.

WHAT A BENEFIT

November 1 is a very special occasion at Watertown's On the Square restaurant when there will be a benefit dinner for The Foundation for Faces of Children, a non-profit organization dedicated to enhancing and ensuring the quality of life to children with facial abnormalities. $35.00 per person includes a complete dinner, two glasses of wine, tea or coffee, tax and gratuities; the entire proceeds will be donated to the Foundation. The dinner selections sound fabulous and include Maine shrimp, brie and tarragon crostinis, slow roasted chicken with rosemary butter and garlic mashed potatoes and white chocolate lemon mousse tart. For information, call the Foundation at 891-0325 or the restaurant at 923-1522.

PEOPLE IN THE NEWS

Congratulations to Dawn (pastry chef at Figs) and Mark Rose (chef at Commonwealth Brewing) who succeeded in celebrating their second anniversary in the midst of Fig's opening and Mark's participation at the Great Yankee Rib Cookoff.... Ross Cameron has left his chef position at the Back Bay Bistro and may be opening his own restaurant in Brookline together with David Wainright (formerly manager of the Back Bay Bistro). A possible location is 1223 Beacon Street (site of the Dover Grill). Nothing is confirmed yet, but there is talk of funky decor and a fun, reasonably priced menu. Congratulations are due, too, to Ross who recently married Kathy Stauner. Naturally, the reception was held at Cornucopia, where brother Stuart Cameron is chef.

THE JUICY DETAILS

Plans by George Germon and Johanne Killeen of Al Forno to open a restaurant in the Armani building on Newbury Street have been called off. However they have not ruled out the possibility of opening up somewhere else in Boston; meanwhile there is talk of another restaurant taking up this space instead....Ann's Restaurant at 240 Cambridge Street, Boston is in the process of expanding, and when work is completed, will be about double in size. Meanwhile, it's open for business as usual....The site at 116 Huntington Ave (near the Copley Marriott) just begs to be turned into a restaurant, and word is that half a dozen or so local restaurant owners are looking into the possibility.... A little talked about event was the recent Chowdafest. Congratulations to Gourmeli's (in the Copley Marriott) for winning top honors.... Sunday brunch is now being served at the Blue Room. An all-you-can-eat cold buffet is offered, together with a choice of hot entree; there will also be live blues music. Cost is $15.00. ❑

Attack of The Unstoppable Sex Machine

Carter USM Get Sensitive

BY DAVID DALEY

Carter the Unstoppable Sex Machine would be a wonderful concept for a series of B movies. Imagine the possibilities: Carter the Unstoppable Sex Machine Eats Tokyo, Carter the Unstoppable Sex Machine Battles Intergalactic Space Mutants to Save the Universe, Attack of the Killer Carter the Unstoppable Sex Machine. This episode might have been called Jim Bob and Fruitbat Take Manhattan. But the boys seem tired as we talk in a dark conference room high above New York City. It's not easy being an unstoppable sex machine.

Carter USM have taken on larger-than-life 'B' movie qualities on 101 Damnations and 30 Something (Chrysalis) starring as both the giant asteroid headed straight toward the spaceship, and the two deranged scientists in white jackets attempting to steer the vehicle free from danger. They set their phasers on stun, switch on the drum machine and then everything in the news becomes mere grist for the Carter mill. If Public Enemy is the CNN of rap, Carter USM is punk-pop's USA Today.

But today they seem limp. Even flaccid. Worse, serious. Neither of which, of course, is a particularly flattering description for a sex machine as insatiable as Carter.

"We really believe that the world is just falling apart," Fruitbat bemoaned from across the conference table. It's a Tuesday afternoon in New York, the second day of the Democratic National Convention, and Carter USM are up on a soapbox of their own.

"The Democrats are across town - they're your liberal party - and they've moved all the homeless people away from Madison Square Garden to keep them off television. It's a bit like out Labour Party backing the Gulf War," Fruitbat explained. "Liberals moving away from principles to get more votes."

"We don't like to preach to people and we're not going to tell anyone what to do, but we like to write songs about things that mean something to us," Jim Bob added.

Carter's appeal has always been that they take on important issues without being a serious band. While the pair have wandered that fine Spinal Tap line between stupid and clever, they've done so self-consciously, with good-natured goofiness, an anti-rock star pose and a hoarty wink at those hip enough to be in on the joke.

Their new album 1992: The Love Album is a heavy-handed attempt for respectability that stifles their creativity - manic repressive where the beats were once riotous, juvenile where puns and rhymes covered up their shopping-list lyrical approach. The symbols and images that they once appropriated tongue-in-cheek seem foot-in-mouth, not to mention downright cynical.

For example, their borrowing of the flag of a unified Europe for their album cover, "because you won't be able to escape it this year," is brilliant. But when they market the single "The Only Living Boy in New Cross" with a cartoon condom and say that it is a song about AIDS - when there's no reference to the disease in the song - it comes time to ask who the joke is on.

"You're right, there's nothing in the song specifically about AIDS, but it was inspired by it, and maybe some people will be better informed about it now," Fruitbat replied. Isn't that the same argument the Democrats and the Labour Party use to explain their shift in the middle, and the silencing of the Left?

The songs they cover usually add levity and they usually destroy icons, but a straight n' sincere cover of The Man of La Mancha's "The Impossible Dream" turns a slow and plodding show tune into, well, a slow and plodding Carter song. After a record of diatribes about England and terrorism and homelessness and whatever else, they try to paper over their cynicism by this cover and by calling the record The Love Album. It's like a science student trying to fudge the numbers on a lab report to make the conclusion come out right. They want to agitate and reassure all at once.

"We're thinking of releasing 'The Impossible Dream' as our Christmas single," Jim Bob said. Seriously? "Seriously."

The hearty wink, the inspired sarcasm and lunacy, replaced by a wishy-washy desire for things to be nice and people to get along. And this after traveling the world and reporting back about all the bad guys? They had three chances left to show some Carter splash.

I ask them about Jon Beast, their beloved man o' lard who encouraged the crowds to shower him with the shouts of "You fat bastard" that has become the band's motto.

"Oh, we fired Jon," said Fruitbat. "It got to a point where we just didn't approve of what he was doing. We thought it was racist and sexist, and turning into a bit of a sideshow, really." Strike one.

I ask about the lawsuit filed against them because of their use of one line of the Rolling Stones' "Ruby Tuesday," and the resulting ban on their playing the song, feeling certain to get some choice quotes about Mick Jagger.

"Oh, I doubt if he ever heard the song. It was just the publishing company," Jim Bob said apathetically.

How about your name, I ask, approaching the question they hate the most. Ever been asked about it before in an interview? Nudge nudge. Wink wink. Know-what-I-mean?

With glimmer in their eye, their fingers shoot up and they point at each other. "It's him," they said in unison, laughing maniacally. Welcome back, Carter .❑

Been Caught Stealing

The 25th of May Rebel Against Capitalism

BY REY ROLDAN

"I was caught stealing once when I was a kid about five," confesses Steve Swindelli, vocalist for English rap rockers The 25th of May, sounding a bit like a recent Jane's Addiction single. "It was my first attempt when I got caught. The police came around and all I stole was a bag of crisps. It was really sad and stupid." He pauses as if asking silently for forgiveness. "But I never got caught since."

For Swindelli and band, shoplifting is not so much a crime as it is a rebellion against this capitalist system in which we live. "Shoplifting is like small-scale wealth distribution," he explains. "It challenges society's ideals about crime. The whole system is based on crime. The wealth within Europe and the Americas is based on the expropriation of land and people and raw materials and resources. [Shoplifting] is just petty crime in the most pettiest way [sic]."

Blatantly political and unabashedly serious, Swindelli weasels politics into almost every conversation he can. In a shining example of his political obsession, the song "0898" (named after England's version of 1-900 talk lines) from their Arista debut Lenin and McCarthy, contains his conversation with an anonymous woman. She tries to talk about sex but he steers it toward politics. So does that mean politics are more important than sex to Swindelli?

"Of course not," he replies. "I'd be a rather boring bastard if it were. What I'm talking about is the politics of sex. The oppression of individualism, the isolation and the alienation of sexuality has really taken over people's mentality over sex in a way that you really can't express yourself. You're still considered a pariah in society if you're gay. So a change in government would have to mean a change in sexual politics as well."

For Swindelli, the perfect form of government would be "a true democracy where you have to vote for every appointed official, including teachers and judges. All we need is

CRAVING FOR THE LAURELS

k.d. lang Leaves Country for a Little Ingenuity

BY ROBERT LENAHAN

k.d. lang carrying a well-lit torch

k.d. lang

PERFORMS AT THE WORCESTER MEMORIAL AUDITORIUM
TUESDAY, OCTOBER 27
CALL TICKETMASTER FOR MORE INFO.

k.d. lang doesn't like calling too much attention to herself although she does so inevitably. Spelling her name with lower case letters understates her self-importance, while it draws attention to its improper grammar. But her voice is the factor that shoots her way above simple particulars. Combining the urgency of pop, the sentimentality of country and the seductive growl of torch, lang has attacked all three fronts and carried off the laurels. Garnering gold albums and various awards including two Grammys (Best Vocal Collaboration for "Crying" with Roy Orbison, Best Female Country Artist for Absolute Torch and Twang (Sire)), she abandoned the Country world and settled into the emotional and jazzy territory of torch. Released earlier this year, Ingenue has scored two hits with "Miss Chatelaine" and "Constant Craving." But there's no mistaking the Canadian country twang in her voice.

"Coming to the end of the Torch and Twang tour, I felt it was time for me to move on from country," lang explains. "I mean, here I had won the Grammy but I still wasn't getting airplay, and. . . I had been as creative as possible with country music and I had basically run the course."

With Ingenue, her new course leads toward the old school of singing. "So many things helped out on this record," she admits. "Everything from like, The Carpenters to Kurt Weil to the great songwriters, Leonard Cohen, Joni Mitchell, Burt Bacharach, even. Really different songwriters. As far as the singers, the more subtle styles, like Peggy Lee, Julie London, Carmen McCrae, the people who use the softer, more subtle tones rather the torch side of things. I tried to move away from the powerful, not for any specific reason other than that I wanted to grow as a singer. I think quieter is, in a certain aspect, more emotive."

While not as bouncy as Absolute Torch and Twang or as experimental as Shadowland, Ingenue opens lang's music to an older, mature mindset. "Ingenue to me sort of conjures up the emotional puberty of this record, and how not only switching genres makes me an infant but also love itself makes me an infant," she explains. "Really that you're not in control and realizing that when you hit thirty that love is something you can't control and that it hurts as much as it feels good [is] really what this record is about."

Uncertain where she is headed next musically, lang just wants to keep on exploring new genres and run off with the laurels. "I think to write songs, to experience the writing and recording of this record was ultimately successful for me," she adds. "To enjoy listening to it at this point is a big plus for me, so in terms of what I expect [from Ingenue], it has already been given to me." ❑

a system that satisfies people's physical needs first without being totally exploited in order to procure a lifestyle necessary for it." Asked whether he believes a system like this could ever exist, he replies, "Sure it can. The democracy that governs most of the world today has only been really in existence for two hundred years, and that was once considered an impossibility. So why not?"

Although five-finger discounts are morally acceptable, sampling is not. "If you take a song phrase or harmonic part [and use it as a sample] without permission, than it's stealing," Swindelli attests. "We don't really use sampling that much. We occasionally use it for sounds, but never really to base our songs on. Recently, we took a Sly and the Family Stone track that we might use [on an upcoming song] but we asked permission. It isn't stealing if you acknowledge it and give credit where it's due and you get permission to use it. Otherwise, you can get in a lot of shit."

As The 25th of May prepare for their upcoming U.S. tour in support of Carter USM, Swindelli plans not only to tear up the venues with his blistering alternative rap, but to do a little 'shopping' as well. "We only get like $160 a week [from the record company] to live on," he says. "So any opportunity we get to increase our revenue is easily seized." Attention Boston merchants: Lock the doors! ❑

10,000 Maniacs
"Our Time in Eden"
Elektra

The Maniacs' latest release, Our Time in Eden, shows the band fully coming into its own, lyrically. In the haunting "I'm Not the Man," Merchant sings of an innocent man condemned to die ("Call out the KKK with their friendly look of half-demented zeal/ they'd love to serve me my last meal"). The powerful imagery echoes in the listener's thoughts as the band's instruments including a bassoon paints a vivid, aural atmosphere.

Throughout the album, the five-piece band adds twists and turns to their post-folk sound. A vivacious horn section adds bounce to "Few and Far Between" creating a sharp contrast to the bitter lyrics. While "Circle Dream" among others rely on Merchant's powerful yet breathy vocals to carry them, she is up to the challenge, making even the less successful tracks enjoyable. A band that continues to evolve, the Maniacs deserve widespread recognition for their latest effort. Paradise is not totally lost because with Our Time in Eden, Merchant can make even a phone book sound like heaven.

Ellen Taaffe Zwilich: Concerto for Flute and Orchestra
Walter Piston: Concerto for Flute and Orchestra
Leonard Bernstein: Halil
Doriot Anthony Dwyer, Flute
London Symphony Orchestra
James Sedares, Conductor
Koch International

Since the baroque era, works for flute and orchestra have not been especially abundant. Those written in this century receive occasional performances, but the general repertory heard in concerts and on recordings continues to draw on works from the past or on transcriptions. Zwilich's atmospheric concerto was commissioned by the Boston Symphony for Dwyer in recognition of her distinguished tenure as principal flutist. Piston's crisply neo-classical concerto was also written for her. Bernstein's Halil stands as one of his more coherent works and despite its being based on a tone row, it gravitates toward the broad lyricism for which Bernstein was justly famed. Koch International could have been a bit more generous with this program; it clocks in at just under forty-nine minutes. An additional piece could have easily been included. That aside, this program serves as a fine vehicle for Doriot Anthony Dwyer's impeccable artistry.

-Steven D. Brown

Cowboy Mouth
"Word of Mouth"
Domino

If The Cult's Ian Astbury and John Mellencamp had an illigitimate son and raised him on Freddy Fender and The Georgia Satellites, Cowboy Mouth could have been naturally born. Instead, the year-old band is the result of straying members of influential indie bands (Red Rockers, Dash Rip Rock, The Normals and The Backbeats) who sound as if they share a common dad. Like North Carolina's Connells, Cowboy Mouth's three chord rock approach is pure, unadulterated first rate rock coated with thoroughly addicting narcotic melodies. "Long Gone" with its whiny guitars and forlorn vocals chimes in swirling lonely passion fit for a country song but without the smarm. With three part harmonies wafting through loss and heartache like smoke through a screen, they get past the normal filter of 'typical indie garage band' and float around the heavyweights. Although they present solid rock with a Southern flair, they don't get lost in the swamps of calm, placid pop. Their instruments are always upfront and in-your-face without forcing you to lower the volume. Now that R.E.M. have gone folk and The Connells have gotten bored, it's time to start spreading the news.

-Rey Roldan

[Cowboy Mouth play Johnny D's on October 24]

Extreme
"III Sides to Every Story"
A&M

The Beautiful Boston Bay Boys have released another imaginative platter of electric guitar mastery, tuneful chorus chants and fun attitude. III Sides to Every Story continues Extreme's rise into pop-metal Godness and proves that Boston is still the birthplace of the best tuneage.

Handling guitar with a magical performance on "Warheads", Nuno Bettencourt makes it obvious he's one of the industry's best with floatingly fast chords and the pick precision of a brain surgeon. Gary Cherone's singing is a standout in pop-metal because he doesn't have the syrupy tone of Vince Neil. Instead, he has a rougher, boyish pitch that bolsters rock tunes and sweetens ballads. Drummer Paul Geary dictates the pace into a tight recording, and bassist Patrick Badger keeps the low end smooth.

Thought they'd change to mega-ballad masters after the success of "More Than Words"? About one third of the disc is balladish, but their best still lies in rock rather than smarm. Perhaps due to popularity, Extreme has slowed down a little bit on III Sides..., but this decrease in speed has let in more room for thought, rhythm changes and time for the instruments to play around between beats. Overall, it's an experience that reaches way over standard glam-metal rock into a bin of Boston-bred creativity.

-George Poulos

Happy Mondays
"Yes Please"
Elektra

It's probably not fair to the band, but honestly I didn't like their new CD, ...Yes Please until after the music was over. The best part of the album occurs after the predictable songs have stopped churning and vocalist Shaun Ryder appears from nowhere trying to have a phone conversation with the Pope, the Queen, the Prime Minister and the President. All the receptionists that answer the phone eventually hang-up on his burly, English accent (especially the receptionist at the White House, who after asking what the call is in reference to is told, "Ooh, just wantin' to chat..."). If the songs on the album could match the phone conversations for humor, spontaneity, and originality, ..Yes Please would do a lot better.

The lead track and first single "Stinkin' Thinkin" is one of those songs. A nearsighted plea to a lost girlfriend, the song lays down a strong rhythm and is complemented with a strong hook. Another song worth a listen is "Cut 'Em Loose, Bruce" with its fast ska percussion and toasting from Kermit.

Overall, the album sinks under its own weight. Attempts to save the ship like using frequent Happy Mondays back-up singer Rowetta and her throaty, sweeping vocals help, but even she can't save the album as it spins away into mindless, repetitive oblivion. -Sander Wolf

Soul II Soul
"Volume III Just Right"
Virgin

Soul II Soul - the sonic brainchild of mastermind Jazzie B - is indeed one of the more influential dance sensations exported from the other side of the Atlantic. Spawning a host of imitators such as Lisa Stansfield, the Chimes and the Family Stand, Soul II Soul's debut single "Keep on Movin," pushed the band's trademark sound - an innovative hodgepodge of 70's R&B, jazz, and reggae - towards platinum success three years ago. Nothing on the third album, Just Right, matches up to the brilliance of its debut, but Jazzie B still has what it takes to keep things going, well, just right. The album's two instrumentals, "Storm" and "Mood," are sleek, sexy and seductive excursions, while the first single "Joy" and the title track (which, for the first time, feature male vocalists) also stand out. And for those who missed guest vocalist Caron Wheeler on Soul II Soul's last outing, 1990: A New Decade, she reappears on another noteworthy track, "Take Me Higher," which, like the rest of the album, will take you higher to a new plateau of dance music.

-Richard Williams

T-Bone Burnett
"The Criminal Under My Own Hat"
Columbia

T-Bone Burnett is better know as a producer than a singer-songwriter having worked with Elvis Costello, Sam Phillips, Joe Henry and practically every other recording artist at one time or another. After listening to The Criminal Under My Own Hat, his first solo album in years, it's easy to figure out why.

The songs are meticulously produced, and songs like "Criminals," "I Can Explain Everything," "Over You" and "Tear This Building Down," grow on you like weeds, but the awkwardness of the album still peaks through. Nonetheless, it's hard to dislike the album - Burnett has some interesting views on the world and asks some provoking questions. Take the line "How can anyone spend six million dollars every four years/To get a job that makes ten thousand per?" from "I Can Explain Everything (Part 2)" for example. Listen to Burnett's singles on the radio, and if they start sticking under your skin get the album. The Criminal Under My Own Hat is one of those rare albums that people either love, hate, or are forced to listen to because they can't get it out of their head. There is no in-between.

-Sander Wolf

Various Artists
"Music from Northern Exposure" MCA

All the way from Cicely, Alaska comes a collection of songs culled from such a well-known group of artists that it makes nothing short of perfect sense to listen to it. This soundtrack has the key ingredients for success: a seemingly random, if not deliberately scattered choice of music you'd throw on a home-mixed tape and a wide enough variety of styles (Pop, Techno, Classical, Reggae, African, Jazz and original compositions) to satisfy even the snobbiest of connoisseurs. Under the guidance of Co-creator Joshua Brand, Associate Producer Martin Bruestle and postproduction man Steve Turner, Exposure relies on tunes from artists like Miriam Makeba, whose "Emabhaceni" is the perfect appetizer for Nat King Cole and his Trio's "When I grow Too Old To Dream." Fitting comfortably in with such soothing melodies are Lynyrd Skynyrd's "Gimme Three Steps," Booker T and the MG's "Hip Hug Her" and the electronic punch of Magazine 60's "Don Quichotte". From the reaching notes of Etta James' "At Last" to that happy-go-lucky moose music from David Schwartz's main title theme, Exposure is one TV soundtrack you shouldn't be embarrassed to own. This is a soundtrack to which you can either groove, bathe, dance or sleep. Long live the moose!

BARS & CLUBS

•ALLSTON SPORTS DEPOT 783-2300, 353 Cambridge St., Allston. With 2 satellite dishes and over 20 TV sets, this may be the best place to catch a game outside of Fenway or the Garden. No cover and no dress code. Just a plethora of sports fans chatting- and arguing about," what else, sports - over beers, appetizers and killer burgers. .

•ARBUCKLES 782-9508, 1249 Comm. Ave, Brighton. Situated between BU and BC, Arbuckles attracts an even mix of students from both schools and anyone else in search of good food and drink at a good price. 20 oz. drafts for $2!!! The dress is always casual bu"t the atmosphere ranges from mellow and relaxing to noisy and boisterous

•AVALON 262-2424, 15 Lansdowne St., Bos Boogie to Hip Hop, Funk, House, Progressive and Top 40 music at this colossal dance club. Music varies nightly. Take advantage of the enormous dance floor, placid lounge, and intimate booths. Avalon also bo"asts having the best light show in town. The crowd here is a good mix; anyone in the mood for dancing should feel comfortable. Cover charge varies. Dressy slacks, collared shirts, and dark dress shoes requir"ed. Great place to see live shows. Sun. night is gay night

•AVENUE C 423-3832, 5 Boylston Pl., Bos A chichi dance club located in the Theatre District across from the Common. Inside you'll find a mix of young professionals who arrive to meet, mix, mate, or just dance up a storm. Cover charge increases afte"r 10 pm, so arrive early. No jeans or collarless shirts. Progressive music Fri. & Sat. nights

•BILL'S BAR 421-9678, Lansdowne St., Boston. Located in the midst of Lansdowne St., Bill's can be a great alternative to the dance clubs. It caters to a crowd consisting anywhere from punk to preppie. Bill's reputedly has the best jukebox in the city, p"rogramed by Peter Wolf. It's loud, clean and showcases live music occasionally. Casual and very relaxed

•BLACK GOOSE 617-720-4500, 21 Beacon St., Boston. A relaxed jazz club situated a stones throw from the Statehouse. Sit back and enjoy superb live jazz at its best. It's casual, unassuming and you don't have to wear an "I love jazz" attitude on your sleeve. "No cover. Live piano music Monday through Friday from 5-7.

•BLACK ROSE 742-2286, 160 State St., Bos Live, traditional Irish music 7 days and an atmosphere that thrives on patron participation characterize this Faneuil Hall bar whose name is a symbol of Irish Catholic repression by the British. The food is ho"me spun and the beer, well. . Irish. The upbeat crowd is composed of students, professionals, locals etc. and they all get involved in the show. Beware, people will know your status by stealing a glance at "your claddagh ring! Moderate cover weekends. Casual dress.

•BOSTON BEACH CLUB 227-9660, 300 Faneuil Hall Mktpl., Bos A strong seaside theme prevails. Surfboard tables, plastic sharks, tropical drinks and a guy next to you wearing a Hawaiian shirt adorned with a few dozen neon leis. The crowd is young and the music often liv"e. There is a small dance floor for those who like to bop

•BULL & FINCH PUB (CHEERS) 227-8665, 84 Beacon St., Bos A recent study confirmed what many Bostonians have assumed for years, The Bull & Finch actually attracts more tourists than most of the sights on the Freedom trail! The TV show Cheers uses the doorway of the B"ull & Finch for their opening shot, but nothing else. Still, it offers a comfortable and boisterous neighborhood atmosphere. Try it at least once. No cover. Casual dress

•BUNRATTY'S 254-9804, 186 Harvard Ave., Allston. A rock club favorite featuring top local talent nightly. The atmosphere is dark and smoky, but once the music starts jamming the place comes alive. Moderate cover varies depending on the act(s). No dress code

•CLARKE'S 227-7800, 21 Merchant's Row, Bos Located just outside of Faneuil Hall, this is a popular meeting place for Boston singles and college students. Clarke's has that old-fashioned saloon appeal that makes it easier to let your guard down. Expect" a line on weekends. No cover. Casual dress. Full menu in the restaurant.

•COMMONWEALTH BREWING COMPANY 523-8383, 138 Portland St., Bos "Let no man thirst for lack of real ale" is the motto at this microbrewery and restaurant featurng glass walls so thirsty patrons can longingly observe the brewing process. The decor consists of copper t"ables, pipes and beer tanks. Approximately 10 English ales are served on tap as well as "Boston Burton Ale" served frosty cold in the bottle. Close proximity to the Boston Garden translates to before and afte"r game crowds. Live Reggae and Calypso every Friday and Saturday Nite 9:30 to 1:00. Brewery tours are free, but sorry, this isn't the Molson factory. No samples. $3 Cover. Have dinner here and no cover

•COTTONWOOD CAFE 661-7440, 1815 Mass. Ave., Bos Open daily for lunch and dinner, this casual yet upscale cafe makes you feel like you've landed in the heart of Arizona. The southwestern cuisine (try the grilled specials) is complemented by the adobe booths "and multitude of cacti. Relax in the outdoor cafe during the hot summer months

•CROSSROADS 262-7371, 495 Beacon Street, Boston. Hailed as one of the last neighborhood pubs in Back Bay, this casual hotspot is frequented by locals, students and young professionals. Among its many attractions are three dart boards, cable sports, a loud juk"ebox and Guiness on tap. Open 7 days a week 'til 2

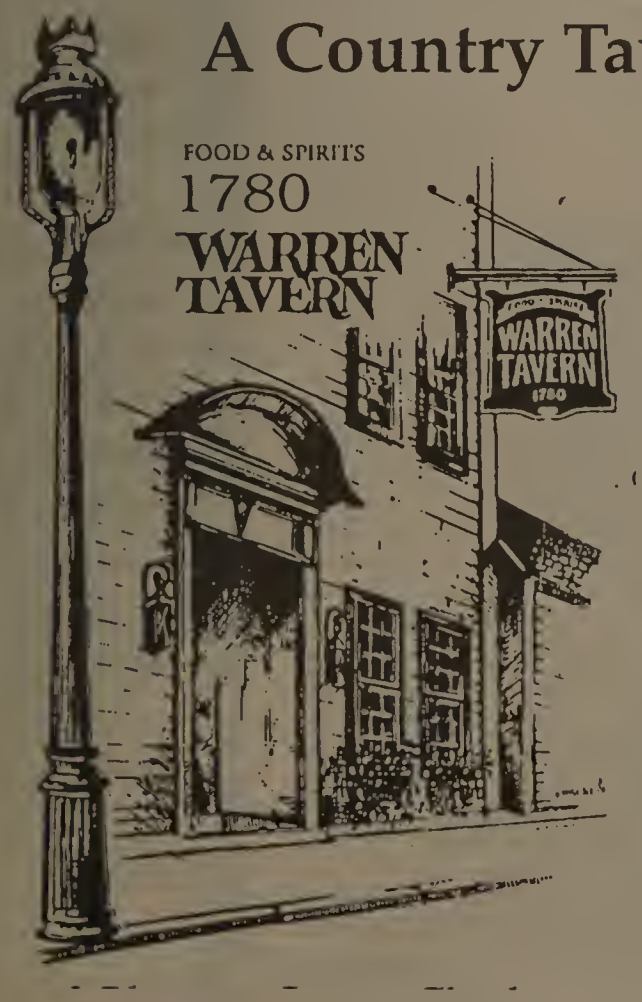
•DAISY BUCHANAN'S 247-8516, 242 Newbury St., Bos This Newbury St. late night hot spot packs up consistently with singles on the make. A dark and noisy place, where at least one anonymous source has protested the lack of condom dispensers at the bar. More a"ction as the night wears on, this is a great place to be for last call. No cover. Casual dress

•FROGG LANE BAR & GRILL 720-0610, 245 Faneuil Hall Mktpl., Bos At this large Faneuil Hall patio bar, the crowd is a mix of tourists and locals. Lofted above the crowd in Faneuil Hall, Frogg Lane offers a mixed menu of American and Mexican fare. No cover or dress code. Jukebox for indoor entertainment

•GREEN BRIAR 789-4100, 304-306 Washington St., Brighton. This neighborhood Irish pub in the heart of Washington Square has the best combination of the Celtic feel far from the parking mess of Government Center. Entertainment ranges from Irish music to the occasional" progressive band. The crowd is a healthy mix of neighborhood folk and recent college graduates. Modest cover on weekends. Casual dress.

•HARD ROCK CAFE 424-7625, 131 Clarendon St., Bos Sure it's trendy and sure it's touristy, but where else can you watch people ooh-ing and aah-ing at a shrine devoted to Prince. Save any important and serious conversation for the ride home because, chances ar"e, you won't be able to hear each other over the loud music anyway.

•HARPER'S FERRY 254 9743, 158 Brighton Ave., Allston. Perhaps Boston's best known R & B bar, Harpers offers live music nightly. Most of the bands are top local blues acts, but on Sun. the amateurs take over with open mike night. Smoky but lots of fun with darts "and billiards and a large dance floor. Moderate cover varies depending on the act. Collared shirts are required.



So you like live music but hate the hassle– standing in long lines, paying enormous covers, hearing your ears ring for days and days...
There is an alternative!

The "Last Call" Lady

All Prickly at The Cactus Club

BY LAUREN DARE

Whoooeee - just like their T-shirt says, you can get grilled, sautéed, roasted, naked and bit at the Cactus Club, and probably all at the same time. I was afraid to try for fear some part of my body might get seriously burned or maimed. It's bad enough that I'm slowly turning my brain cells into one giant brewing vat, without having all that damage show on the outside too. This Boylston Street bar/restaurant is a Tex-Mex extravaganza. The walls and ceilings are festooned with ten times more Mexican memorabilia than Vern and Myra ever could have brought back from their big RV trip to the great South West. A lot of this stuff is really fun, and if there happens to be nothing better to gaze at in your immediate vicinity, you can amuse yourself by checking out the decor. The best piece by far is the incredibly studly and woolly bison mounted over the bar. Mike Bison or Kim Bisonger (among other names) occasionally lets loose a big steamy, snuffly snort form his flaring nostrils, probably expressing his opinion of the goings on below him. Would that we all could find so interesting and impressive a means of conveying our disdain when faced with one of those completely disdainful scenarios: "No thank you, I don't particularly care to go back to your place and lick whipped cream off your chest." Snort, steam snort. Talk about smoke signals - this way you'd never have to be outright rude to the schmuck sitting next to you, you could just...blow off a little steam, as it were.

The Cactus Club is famous for its margaritas and big bowl drinks. The margaritas range from $3.95 to $5.95, and, like condoms, come in all your favorite flavors and colors. The Cactus

Mary Bartolomei

Bowl is as large as my bathtub, and tastes a great deal better than the contents thereof (although, you know, I did once have someone ask if they could drink my bathwater. Go figure.) If you go for one of these babies ($8.95) my advice is: don't go it alone. You might wake up sometime next week in downtown Cancun, wearing nothing but a red bandanna and one cowboy boot, wondering if you should have taken that left turn at Albuquerque.

The juke box is pretty up-to-date and rockin', featuring pop and classical favorites from our misbegotten youths. I can guarantee though, that no matter when you happen to drop by the Cactus Club, some joker with a really finely tuned sense of humor will just have played "Margaritaville." I think this is what is known in Latin as overkillus extremis, or driving the point home extra hard. I mean, I know that if I'm in Margaritaville (or its closest local approximation, the Cactus Club) that I have already wasted away and there's no need at all to rub it in even more.

The Cactus Club

The crowd at the Cactus Club is mixed yuppy (and if that's not an oxymoron, I don't know what is) late 20's to mid 30's, well-dressed, a little businessy, some in suits - some in jeans, a couple in work boots and flannel shirts, some in full body leather (just kidding). It kind of reminded me of my first experience with a loaf of Wonder Bread: there were a couple of heels in there, but the middle is soft and white. And of course, there was the inevitable moment when, as happens every time I go out, I ran into the biggest idiot in the world, and he decided that he liked me. I think Queen Elizabeth said it best when she said, "Leave me alone you boring little man." Snort Snort. Next!

But really, with a couple more margaritas and a little imagination, I had myself a fine ol' time at the Cactus Club. It's packed almost every night of the week, they have great chips and salsa (which might actually make you blow steam out of your nose) and the crowd is energetic and good-looking, if a little homogenous. I guess I would Dare to give it the thumbs up, and recommend diving into one of their Cactus Bowls for a few laps. ❑

•LILY'S 720-5580, 101 S. Market Faneuil Hall Mktpl., Bos The tourists have found a good deal at this cafe/piano bar where one can sample quality cheap eats and listen to piano Fri.-Sat. nights. No cover or dress code

•LUCKY JOHNNY'S 731-6753, 1098 Comm. Ave., Boston. Classic Rock rhythms fill the air at this upbeat college bar frequented mostly by BU, BC and Pine Manor students. On weekends, it gets pretty crowded. So beat the lines and get there early. The barback grill" is always open and the smaller underground lounge is a nice place to chat. Dress is a relaxed casual to somewhat dressy. Best of all, there's never a cover.

•MARKET PLACE CAFE 227-9660, 300 Faneuil Hall Mkt., Boston. in a comfortable, relaxed area in Faneuil Hall, sit back and listen to the great sounds of the Brian Walkley Band with special guest Bruce Bartlett every Wednesday at 6:30pm. Casual atmosphere and dress.

•NIGHTSTAGE 497-8200, 823 Main St., Camb An intimate, well laid-out club with a seating capacity of just 250. National and well known local acts. Blues, Rock, Zydeco, Jazz, Folk and Country are propelled by a sound system that will blast you comfort"ably to the outer limits of space and back. One of Boston's best "up-close-and-personal" clubs. Casual dress. Call Ticketron 931-2000 for ticket info.

•PARADISE ROCK CLUB 254-2052, 967 Comm. Ave., Bos One of Boston's best "live" clubs. Inside, you'll find one of the last of the small stages which still attracts national and international acts. Cover varies from moderate to heavy. Dress is casual. Dancin"g on non-band nights. For show tickets, call Ticketmaster at 931-2000 Minimum age varies by show. .

•PERRY'S 367-1297, 199 State St., Boston. Upstairs young professionals follow their favorite teams on six TV screens. While downstairs, college students and young professionals dance the night away Wed.-Sat. Located in the Faneuil Hall area, the dres"s is casual and the popcorn is excellent! Lunch and dinner served 11:30am-11pm.

•RATHSKELLER 536-2750, 526 Comm. Ave., Kenmore Sq., Bos Affectionately known as the "Rat," this is a rock club with staying power. Past headliners have included the Police, 10,000 Maniacs and R.E.M. The Rat attracts a hardcore alternative crowd - lots of black clo"thes and biker jackets. No cover upstairs. Varies downstairs. No dress code. .

• RED HAT 523-2175, 9 Bowdoin St., Bos You'll feel just like you're in a London pub. Dark and casual atmosphere. Attracts young professionals and Beacon Hill residents. No cover. Casual dress. One of the few places you can still get pitchers of mixed drinks

•RYLE'S JAZZ CLUB 876-9330, 212 Hampshire St., Camb If you're a Jazz fan, don't miss Ryles. Downstairs you'll find an older crowd listening to traditional Jazz music. Upstairs is funkier with talented fusion musicians. Feel free to move between floors. Cover" varies from moderate to heavy. Casual dress.

•T'S PUB 254-0807, 973 Comm. Ave., Boston. Great food, lively atmosphere and there's always something going on inside. Younger bar-hoppers beware: Only Valid ID's accepted (they're really tough!). Lunches and dinners are delicious and reasonably price"d. College and thirtysomething crowd. Never a cover but always a good time

•THE BARMUDA TRIANGLE 437-1011, 200 Brookline Avenue, Boston. Located just outside of Kenmore Square, The Triangle features live music seven nights a week. Catch Boston's best Jazz early in the week, and kick up your heels to Latin, R&B, Reggae and Rock through the weeke"nds. Full bar. Reasonable entertainment charge after 9:30. Weekly giveaways include free passes, round trip tickets to Bermuda, T-shirts, parties and more! .

•THE LITTLEST BAR 523-9766, 47 Province, Boston. Located near Downtown Crossing. A quick walk from the Orpheum Theatre, As its name implies, The Littlest Bar is quite little. In fact, the place only seats 17 people. Guinness and Rolling Rock are among the "beers served on tap. Edibles also served. Hours are from 8:30am-12am Weekdays and Saturdays.

•WALLY'S 424-1408, 427 Mass. Ave., Bos Treat yourself to unadulterated Jazz nightly at Wally's. Neatly tucked away on Mass. Ave. not far from Northeastern U., Wally's is easy to miss. The only indication that you've arrived is a small white beer s"ign out front. The atmosphere is dark, smoky and crowded and above all authentic. Mon. is Blues night. No cover. Casual dress. Arrive early to get a seat.

•WARREN TAVERN 241-8142, 2 Pleasant St., Boston. A funky little bar whose clientiele includes young professionals athletes. Reputedly having some of the most beautiful women in Boston.The bar now attracts manly manly athletes.Stars don't mind hanging out at t"he tavern , because no one bothers them. TV is alwayson for sports. No tank tops. Bring I.D. Please don't drink and drive.

•WESTERN FRONT 492-7772, 343 Western Ave., Camb A multicultural Reggae and Jazz bar where it's difficult not to get caught up in the rasta spirit. It's dark and dingy inside, but the place sparks alive when the bands take the stage. Cover varies from moder"ate to heavy. On Sunday nights, visit the Arts Café and enjoy music, comedy, performance art and poetry for only $5. Casual dress.

NATURAL ❤ SELECTION

Like thousands of other happy couples, Kimberly Clayton and Kent Kellough found each other easily and naturally, through Great Expectations. Here is their story.

Q. "And what was the advantage of joining Great Expectations?"

A. "Members of Great Expectations know what they want. They don't play games. My first date with Kent was very comfortable, which was a rare first date experience."

Q. "Kent, what do you tell people about Great Expectations?"

A. "It absolutely works. It's not just for people who are looking for dates, it's also for people who have plenty of dates who aren't finding the right person."

Sheaves Of Class

If the recession has hit the flower-buying public, there are ways to recoup that bounty, and imaginatively and longlastingly so. Plantworks - always a good place to buy slender exotic stems, Dutch and otherwise - has an upside down garden in the back where roses and hydrangeas blanched pale-blue (by drying), meditate upon eternity - readying themselves for the arrangements concocted by these designers. The outcome may combine living plants and ivies with understatedly dramatic silk ones, and may be planted or arrayed in cherub-shaped pots, or feature a lolling sweep of milo "rope," or rattail statice, incorporating sheaves of wheat, one of nature's most pleasing accidental ornaments. Some arrangements (more vegetable than fruit) have artichokes, garlic ropes, nuts and vivid slices of orange - a dried version of an aesthetic salad. A very abundant and "voila-ish" welcome wreath (largely pale but with points of color, a cogent shape and nicely shaggy edges) would be as legitimate a present to adorn a wall as would be a painting. They do topiary, too, such as ivy trained into a large wheel. Corporate clients who want that all-important touch of life and light in their skyscraper have lots to choose from here.

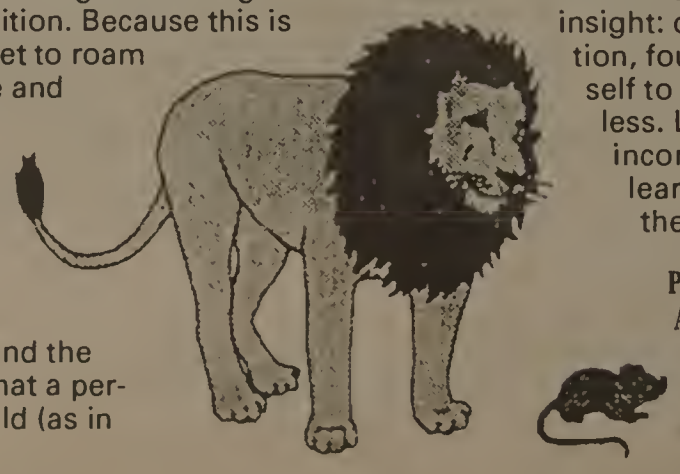
Our Votes Ourselves



When the smoke from that uninhaled reefer blows away, and after the debates and all legitimate and trumped-up issues have been finally hashed over, comes the spare pencil mark at the voting booth. To help voters know what's what in plain fact, liberal-feminist branch, this little book, the Women's 1992 Voting Guide by the Women's Political Action group assembles information on issues of special concern to women: child care, family leave, health care, pay equity, rape and sexual harassment, domestic violence etc. There's no doubt about the book's position, so the Progress Report gives The Bad News and The Good News accordingly. Under "The Women's Vote" the authors array the political goals on that matter under consideration (Passage of the Violence Against Women Act, Mandatory arrest laws for batterers, etc.), and they give a bit of illustrative history to explain the possible impact: "In 1984, Washington State passed a law requiring police to arrest batterers. The result: Arrests jumped 400% and convictions increased 300%."
The authors advise on What To Look For ("If they answer you with phrases like 'preserving the family unit' they may not take domestic violence seriously enough.") They also offer helpful information on pending legislation and the history of the issue, while highlighting the attendant ironies - and they are many: "In theory, the Pregnancy Disability Act of 1978 protects pregnant women and new mothers from job discrimination or dismissal. But only 40% of US employers have maternity-leave policies." A Congressional scorecard shows how members of the House and Senate voted on five bills effecting women, including the Thomas confirmation. Appropriately righteous in its indignation, it's pithily packed, and will be useful beyond the election as well.

From Zero To CEO In Ten Seconds

Trapped as we all are in whatever degree of power we actually possess, there aren't naturally occurring ways to experience what it would be like to have lots more or lots less of it. So, to create an imaginary space for organizations wishing to educate you on, and explore these issues, there is a workshop you can summon up called Power Plays that uses a "serious game" involving the trading of chips to symbolize each player's power position. Because this is merely the "decaf" of power, participants get to roam safely amid the experiences of high, middle and low power (without having to actually be demoted, promoted or fired to learn the lesson), discovering the pleasures and pitfalls, as well as the surprising paradoxes that attend each stripe of power. As temporary actors with this or that degree of authority, they "get," for instance, both the adrenaline and the isolation of big power, and the surprising latitude of influence and vision that a person in an apparently lower position may hold (as in the custodian on the qui vive, well-informed bystander to the proceedings). In the debriefing, players find out, often to their surprise, how they were perceived and everyone gets a chance to feel the interesting friction between their real-life power experiences and what they enacted in this jumble of janitors and kings. The way a player relinquishes, or maintains his or her usual authority offers another line of insight: one teacher, trying to play in this competitive simulation, found it was hard to give up her nice, fair "good mother" self to grab for the chips. Others find it harder to be un-ruthless. Like the alleged muscle memory that dancers use to incorporate choreography, the from-the-inside-out visceral learnings of this workshop come back to remind people of the uses and flavors of power, back at the ranch.

AROUND TOWN

Sample some Pulla crepes and Spanakopita for starters. Then view Indonesian shadow puppetry and "Pysanky" delicate egg decorating. The International Festival 1992 will provide an excellent multicultural experience, and all proceeds will go to The New England Home for Little Wanderers, an agency that exemplifies all that is positive about this area's cultural diversity. Held in The World Trade Center downtown, from Nov. 12-15, this celebration will showcase 50 different cultural communities. Over 25 local restaurants will serve their specialties. An international fashion show and varied folk art and crafts will be featured. Times vary daily. Admission is $8 for adults, children 6-12, $5, Seniors, $6. For more info, call 861-9729.

Sahmain (Halloween) is the Witches New Year. Contrary to popular belief, practicing witches, like High Priestess Laurie Cabot, are not evil or dastardly people. In fact, they're quite like the average Jill or Joe (the term "witch" is unisex by the way), and they want to rock out this Halloween /Sahmain too. If you don't believe it, check out the 1992 Witch's Sahmain Ball on Friday, Oct. 30 from 7pm 'til 1am at Chase House, Pickering Wharf, Salem. This DJ dance party is for 21s and over and includes a "Who Were You in 1692" costume contest. But please, no horror or "ugly witch" costumes allowed. Call (508) 745-8763/ 745-0552 for more details.

Tired of the same "Hey, whaddya say we get nutty and go to a bar" weekend night? Then give Sleuth and Company's Twilight Mystery Tour a try this Halloween weekend. This trolley tour runs from 10:30pm to 12am Friday and Saturday nights , winding by various sites of infamous Boston deeds. The notorious characters come alive again through the "medium" tour guide. And at midnight (the witching hour), all guests of these late evening tours are invited to Zanzibar and/ or The Alley Cat free of charge. Reservations are requested. Tickets are $18.50 and proceeds go toward restoring Boston's historic burying grounds. Call 542-2525 for details.

This year marks the 300th anniversary of the Salem Witch Trials, and Salem is pulling all its skeletons out of the closet. Days of Judgment, on display at Salem's Peabody and Essex Museum, focuses on the social, religious and political climate of 1692 that created such widespread fear, prejudice and persecution and emphasizes the dangers of intolerance and mob mentality. Days of Judgment features lectures and tours featuring a facsimile of a 17th century house. Original court documents from the trials are also on display. Days of Judgment is running now and has been extended into February of 1993. Hours vary and admission including the exhibits is $6 for adults, $5 seniors and Children 6-16, $3.50. Call 508-744-3390/745-1876. For additional info concerning other tercentenary activities, call 508-745-9595.

Sickness and smiles, bleakness and warmth. The acclaimed off-Broadway hit, Marvin's Room by Scott McPherson has come to Cambridge's Hasty Pudding Theater. from Oct. 28 to Nov. 29. The play depicts a family's transformation due to the ailing health of some of its members. Drawing from his own experiences, McPherson's play depicts harsh realities but manages to garner hope and outlandish humor as well. Definitely a must-see, Marvin's Room has received many critical awards including the 1992 Drama Desk Award and the 1992 Outer Critic's Cirde Award. Performance times vary and tickets are $18-30. Call the Hasty Pudding Box Office 496-8400 or Ticketpro 1-800-828-7080.

Her Wiccan, Wiccan Ways

BY GARY S. KADET

Halloween 1992 marks the 300th anniversary of the infamous Salem witch trials - an event that has entered the language as a universal symbol for reckless persecution. This is appropriate, as practicing witches are emphatic that witchcraft is not so much a craft, but a religion. And just as bible-thumping fundamentalists occupy positions of respect, witches do too, as in the case of National Public Radio correspondent Margot Adler, author of the well-regarded book "Drawing Down the Moon," and local media personality Laurie Cabot, High Priestess of the Church of the Nine Wells and the premier witch of Salem.

> Witches are emphatic that witchcraft is not so much a craft, but a religion.

"Both Margot Adler and I have done lectures for the Essex Institute for the Tercentenary Committee. She and I were both to represent the witches of the world in this commemoration time. We're trying to create more tolerance of all religions.

"Witchcraft comes out of the Celtic tribe only," explains Cabot. "The word 'witch' comes out of Great Britain. It's not applicable to African magic, to South American magic or American Indian shamanism." The facts bear her out. The word "witch" is derived from the Old English word wicca (masculine) or wicce (feminine) meaning to bend. The word wiccan, meaning witches, is used as far back as the Laws of King Alfred (890 a.d.), though Cabot takes it further.

"Witchcraft is a religion in its way of life - this is how we described ourselves prior to the Roman invasions. So that's the word that Caesar and the Church used to cause the holocaust that happened afterwards. It was, and is, a very good religion - it has to do with being connected to the sun, the moon the stars, the changes of the seasons. They were important then and they are important today. We have maintained our religion through two holocausts: one in Europe and one in America. Academically, people cannot say that those hanged in Salem were witches - but Academically they cannot say they weren't.

"We have not been recognized as legal until 1950. Witchcraft was so coupled with Satanism it was deemed a crime. If you make a group of people either totally silly or totally horrifying - there is no middle ground. Then suddenly it became legal, and the first people with the nerve to speak out were very stylized." These were practitioners like Alexander Sanders, the self-styled "King of the Witches," founder of the Alexandrian sect; Gerald Gardner, acolyte of ceremonial Magician "Great Beast" Aleister Crowley (creator of the Crowley-Thoth Tarot), founder of the Gardnerian sect and a proponent of naked or "sky-clad" ritual; and the May-December marrieds Janet and Stewart Farrar, authors of the two-volume, somewhat inaccurately titled "Witches Bible."

Cabot cites their aberrations from tradition and the fancy, often free-form inclusions of swords, Aztec masks, shamanistic drums and the Egyptian mythos as ceremonial magic that is not in itself witchcraft. "The basic traditions came prior to Gardner. They didn't include some of his ceremonial magic, though we do use swords because they're part of our society as well as in Excalibur, "The Sword in the Stone." Cabot recounted that a sword was used in her initiation when she was 16 years old - 44 years ago. It may be that such magic is more than good for the soul, as Cabot looks and acts far younger than her 60 years might otherwise imply. "Elders in the craft, who teach and help guide people in their communities across the world, have taught it mother to daughter, father to son. This is a tradition that's handed down - not something undefined. If you are not taught by an Elder, we may honor your dedication to witchcraft as a solitary, but if you do not Everybody knows that Halloween is actually "Eve of all Hallows," the night before that all but defunct holiday "All Saint's Day." But far from being a quaint tradition kept alive to enrich greeting card manufacturers and absorb bumper pumpkin crops, Halloween is also Samhain (pronounced "sa-when"), the Celtic or witches' new year. And there is likely no place better for celebrating Samhain than Salem, Massachusetts.

In Salem, some Samhain events last from October 22 through November 1 with a city-wide festival of "Holiday Happenings" (744-0004), which is convenient. First, you might want to get there in the light of day to check out the Salem Witch Trials Tercentenary Memorial and pay respects to those who were executed 300 hundred years ago and give Salem its notoriety. You'll be in the proper spirit for the Salem Trolley Olde Salem Village Tour, where one of the town witches will take you through old Salem (Danvers) through the Reverend Paris Archaeological dig, the Danvers Memorial to the Witchcraft Victims, Tapley Hall and the Rebecca Nurse Homestead.

To round out your sense of Salem history, you could then book a tour of the "Everyday and the Extraordinary in Salem in 1692" and walk through the exhibit "Days of Judgment" and the 1684 John Ward House (Adults $6.00, Children $3.50), call 508-744-3390 for details.

The Boston Graveyard Tour

BY DANA BOS

Few if any cities boast five historic graveyards in their downtown center, and the Boston area has 19 altogether. Many are easy to find, just follow that ubiquitous red line that meanders throughout the city - the Freedom Trail. Boston's cemeteries date back to our country's fledgling days. They are the perfect place to explore American history and culture, take a nature stroll, find lunchtime solace or, with the help of the New England Historic Genealogical Society, perhaps locate your own roots.

The list of famous and infamous personalities residing for eternity beneath this city's soil is impressive. Established in 1660, the Old Granary Burial Ground on Tremont Street garners the most in this category. You can find John Hancock (or most of him as you'll read later), Robert Treat Paine and Samuel Adams, all signers of the Constitution. There are headstones for Paul Revere, Peter Faneuil, the famed merchant for whom Faneuil Hall was named and Elizabeth Vergoose, reputed creator of the Mother Goose nursery rhymes. Eight Massachusetts governors, several Boston mayors and victims of the Boston Massacre are interred at the Granary as well.

King's Chapel Burying Ground, also on Tremont, is Boston's oldest graveyard (established in 1630), and harbors other distinguished Americans. Did you know Paul Revere had a companion rider the night of his famous journey? He was William Dawes, and he lies in this cemetery along with John Winthrop, first governor of Massachusetts Bay Colony. Some notable women can be found here too. Mary Chilton was the first female Pilgrim to set foot on American soil at Plymouth. Rumor has it that Elizabeth Pain was Hawthorne's model for Hester Prynne of The Scarlet Letter. According to Boston Parks and Recreation, this is not the case. Hawthorne reportedly did stroll about King's Chapel quite often though, so you never know.

The Central Burying Ground on Boylston is one of the few graveyards still retaining what is believed to be the original configurations of the headstones. If you visit most of these old cemeteries, you will notice the stone markers quite close together, prompting a woman standing near me at the Granary to observe, "They sure must have been short back then." To prevent any future confusion, let it be noted— most gravestones are not over the original graves. Once things started getting crowded, the stones were placed wherever there was room. Then, a WPA project ion the 30s rearranged the stones into the neat lines they are in today.

Even fro those uninterested in inspecting the stones, some graveyards offer tranquility for the overwhelmed city dweller. Boston's garden-style cemeteries contain acres of open space with diverse plant and animal life, ponds, woods and picturesque landscaping. Cambridge's Mt. Auburn Cemetery created in 1831, which has some of the best birdwatching in Massachusetts, was the first garden cemetery in the world and started an aesthetic trend that remains popular today. For socially conscious Bostonians, this site became the place to let their remains decay. In addition to Mt. Auburn 174 sanctuary, there are Evergreen in Brighton (14 acres), Fairview in Hyde Park (44 acres) and Mt. Hope (125 acres). Exercisers please take note however. Only "passive recreation" is permitted; no jogging or cycling allowed.

But what of gory ghost stories or amazing anecdotes? Boston does have thriving paranormal activity, extending far beyond these graveyards. The Emerson Majestic Theater is known to be haunted. A ghost has been drifting about Boston Harbor and its islands, although who it is exactly is up to debate. Some say Edgar Allen Poe, master of ghastly literature, never found peace in the hereafter. Some say a Civil War soldier has come back to haunt the harbor.

Some "proper" Bostonians were guilty of macabre and downright despicable acts. According to the lore, two tombs at Copp's (no, not corpse) Hill in the North End were "stolen," the original occupants' remains and names removed so that the "grave stealers" could be interred there in the future. One of these weasels was a sexton from a neighboring church who was tempted by the prime location of a deceased merchant's plot a bit too much.. Grave robbing of a more traditional sort has also occurred. This time dear John Hancock's grave fell victim. According to Kathy Kottaridis of Boston Parks and Recreation, it was well-known that Mr. Hancock wore a fine and valuable ring and that he was buried with it on. A few of his fellow Americans who were severely lacking in patriotic and brotherly spirit opened his grave one night in hopes of obtaining the ring. Apparently, they could not get it off his finger, so they took the whole hand. Alas, it appears that John Hancock is buried in Boston, but one of his hands may not be.

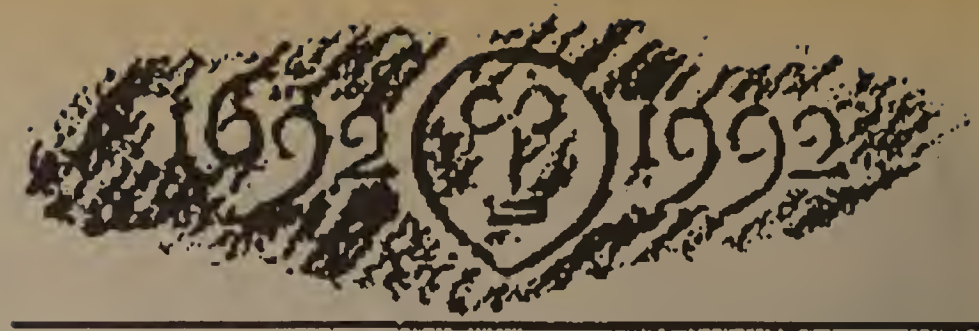
secret passageways that inspired Hawthorne's dark classic. Some of the sad, demented characters from the novel will gladly lead you on a candlelit "Spirit of the Seven Gables" tour - for a price (Call 508-744-0991 for details). And if you don't feel like straining your purse, you could take in "Terror Fantasies," an exhibit of paintings by the town's acknowledged "first coupie of horror," Charles Lang and Wendy Shaw Lang at the O'Flaherty Gallery, 3 central street - for free!



If the kids are with you and aren't much for art, you might put their screams to good use at the haunted House on Salem Common Square where, according to the Chamber of Commerce, you will "explore dark and forsaken space, visit inhabitants of the unseen world and venture into forbidding dark shadows..." (Adults $2.50. Children $1.00; 508-744-0004). There's always Dracula's Castle for those who pine for vampires rather than wish for witches. Located on the Heritage Trail, it's "eerie chambers are filled with live spirits leading to Dracula's Haunted crypt."

After all that, you'll probably be due for a Kookie Kocktail down at Cap'n Scurvy's Haunted Cavern at Pickering Wharf. Refreshed and renewed, you can then while away the rest of the evening with a "Murder at the Hawthorne Hotel, A Halloween Affair." Join the victims and the murderer for dinner and "solve the crime of the decade."

On Samhain itself is the Fall Fair and Lobster Roll Luncheon at the Grace Church 385 Essex St., the St. Joseph Flea Market and Craft Fair at 135 Lafayette St. and the Annual Church fair at the First Universalist Society, 211 Bridge St., from 9am to 3pm, respectively. And after you've had your fill of churches, take a walk on the pagan side with The Council of the Wiccan Elders and the Temple of the Nine Welis. Led by High Priestess Laurie Cabot, a magic circle will be drawn to "keep all greed, hate and evil from coming into the new year." From there, witches and skeptics alike will participate in a candlelight walk from Gallows Hill to the center of Salem (remember to bring your own candle and call 327-0273 for further information).

And if you're in the market for a Halloween Party, you can head over to the Salem Witch's Samhain Ball, at Pickering Wharf from 7pm-1am Friday, October 30 ($15 advance, $20 at the door). The Bali, a benefit for the Witches League for Public Awareness includes a "hot DJ dance party," and a "Who Were You In 1692" costume contest. As presiding witch Laurie Cabot observes, "We begin the new year by dressing up in costumes of what we wish to become." For your own protection as well as for the good of all witches everywhere, no horror or "ugly witch costumes will be allowed." So, unless you plan on cleaning up afterwards, you can leave your broomstick at home.

SALEM WITCH TRIALS TERCENTENARY

take on the tradition, you really can't claim the word "witch" until it's given to you as a way of life by initiation. There's an initiatory rite - which is simple and sweet, very spiritually oriented and not always the same."

Cabot indicates that there are two constant laws. "Anything that you do comes back upon you threefold" (in terms of "bending" the world) and "Do what thou wilt, but do no harm, shall be the whole of the law." On hearing that Great Beast Crowley's version was "Do what thou wilt shall be the whole of the law," Cabot counters, "Yes, but he wasn't a witch at all, was he?

"Because we are just now establishing our liturgies again," she notes, "we are now a religious organization recognized by the government. I recently worked with Judith Beals of the Attorney General's office on some cases that we had, and I was asked to give an affidavit on what witchcraft is. And they would gladly give it to you as a definition. I'm an ordained High Priestess able to marry people in this state, which is Federally recognized." (Laurie Cabot can be reached for private readings - and apparently weddings - at Crow Haven Corner, 508-745-8763).

There's no ten commandments - you may have a lot of power, but you have a lot of responsibility.

Angela Wooldridge

"Black Magic is done in every religion," says Sherry Gamble Arthen, proprietor of Arsenic and Old Lace, and a practicing witch. Arthen is the name of Sherry's spiritual family meaning "of the earth." The energy that you raise through the magic - it's what you do with it. That's why we feel that the energy you send out will come back at you three times over, so you have to be very careful what you put out there. There's no ten commandments - you may have a lot of power, but you have a lot of responsibility. I believe you don't even do a healing ritual without getting permission from the other person first. Sometimes illness serves a purpose, and sometimes people need to be sick to find out what the meaning of their life is."

Arthen's Arsenic & Old Lace (354-7785) is a center for Boston and Cambridge witches, where amulets, Tarot decks, ceremonial candles, charms and herbal remedies are all to be had. The store also stocks a comprehensive selection of books about witchcraft. Arsenic & Old Lace is no mere curiosity shop, despite a cultivated occult ambiance, but a serious resource for the serious witch or inductee into ceremonial magic. Arthen herself offers seminars out of her store for neophytes that occur for six-hour periods during the cycle of the new moon, called "New Moon" and "Full Moon" seminars for the more experienced witch.

"Spells, incantations and charms are tools," says Arthen. "Changing your reality is an ongoing process. I work with the moon. When the moon is waning you're removing the obstacles that are in your way - the blocks that you put up - and with the new moon, you're bringing new things into your life, and are increasing your life."

Jennifer Moore is a talented artist and a Tarot expert who teaches seminars and gives regular Monday readings at Gypsy Moon in Cambridge. She is also a witch, who seems to be more the "Human Potential" school of Starhawk and the Gardnerians than of the Celts. In response to the idea of using a ritual broom as a way of creating a sacred space - a source of the Halloween myth of a witch riding a broomstick - she says, "Sure - I use one to sweep out my kitchen."

But Moore is nothing if not serious about witchcraft. "The movement of wicca pretty much came out of the work that Gardner was doing," she explains. "Wisdom from the earth: I'd say that if there's any one theme, that's one most people would agree with. Witchcraft is a religion that honors the earth, the cycles of the earth, the sun and the moon. We wish to align ourselves with our habitat so that we can enhance our lives through connecting with the greater cycles.

"In many ways it's a very cutting edge, very eclectic religion," she adds. "In some ways it's akin to what it might have been like to be a Christian when they were throwing them to the lions. For all it's antiquity, it's the new kid on the block in a way."

Differing witches agree that Samhain is a time of year when the "veil" between the physical and spiritual worlds is at its thinnest. Among her seminars, Moore is also offering "Lift the Veil: A Samhain Tarot Intensive," and can be reached for readings at 868-5550.

"On the 31st is the ritual at Gallows Hill - a solemn and religious ritual for the New Year," Laurie Cabot concludes, explaining her approach to Samhain. "What we try to do in that circle is to keep out all the harmful things from the past - hate, greed, avarice. You start the New Year right by projecting into it all the comfortable things of society and the world. And we commemorate those who have died for our freedom - so we probably speak the names of those who were hung in Salem." Talking to the witches about Samhain makes it plain that there is more to witchcraft, and certainly more to what we call Halloween than just another round of trick or treat.

An Interview with the Warrens

Ed and Lorraine Warren are two of the most sought-after experts in the modern field of psychic research, as evidenced by the notoriety they've received as the team that first broke the story on the "Amityville Horror." Their research and encounters have taken them around the world, and to places as infamous as not only the house in Amityville, but the demonically-possessed Smurl home in Pennsylvania - and even to Boston. Speaking to The Improper directly before an appearance on the Today Show, Ed Warren shed some light on some rather dark subjects. Check out some of their recent investigations into ghosts, poltergeists and demons and judge for yourself. After all, either you believe.... or you don't.

With over 40 years experience as a demonologist, Ed Warren has had his share of hair-raising adventures. Though he is currently the Director of the New England Society for Psychic Research, it hasn't been a cakewalk through time.

At age eight, he experienced his first ghost, and his recollection of the event is as clear as if it happened yesterday. "I lived in a haunted house in Bridgeport, Connecticut. After my mother said 'get ready for bed' and the lights were out, I saw the closet door start opening up, and a light was shining through from the inside. And there was an older lady with a scowl on her face. That was only the beginning because a lot happened. You could hear footsteps coming up the stairs and heavy breathing, and the lights would be going on and off on their own. My mother was on her way home and we thought we had heard vibrations on the windows. We jumped back in bed, and then footsteps came through the kitchen and up the stairs. My sister was screaming her head off and I was helping her. When the lights went off, this coldness came into the room. Afterward, we thought my mother had come home and had comforted us, but it was actually some angelic presence in the form of my mother. She didn't actually come home until much later. And that's what made me do what I do today. There is a preternatural world and a supernatural world. It's not just a case of belief anymore."

> My sister was screaming her head off...when the lights went off, this coldness came into the room.

This situation and countless others have shaped Ed and his wife Lorraine into the world's two leading paranormal researchers or "psychic investigators." Lorraine is a clairvoyant and a revered psychic whose abilities are respected not only by the psychic community but also by more conservative fields such as the military, police, F.B.I. and even the United States Government. She has assisted in cases of missing persons and has been an integral cog in helping to solve murders. Both Ed and Lorraine refer to themselves as psychic investigators, although Lorraine is the clairvoyant of the two. Ed is a religious demonologist with more of a theologian background which helps to focus him in making rudimentary assessments of their cases. His background in demonology is rare and much different than those of some of the more sensational researchers operating today.

One of the Warren's most recent cases is that of the Lady in White, a phenomena occurring in Easton Connecticut even as this article goes to press. As Ed explains it, "A young fellow named Robert (last name withheld) was coming home last September at 2:40am and had to go past the Union Graveyard. There was fog on the particular road he was driving on, and the only thing there is the graveyard and a Baptist Church. In his peripheral vision he noticed a man on his right. Sitting in the car right next to him was this older man. He looked back on the road, then back into the car and the man was gone."

When he again directed his attention to the road, Robert saw the Lady in White or the "White Lady of Union Graveyard." While clad in nothing but a nightgown, the apparition (or ghost) put her hand up as if to stop his car, but it was too late. She went through the car, and Robert reports that as she passed through it - and through him - an icy cold temperature followed her. He also claims that the road went red before returning to its natural color.

After doing extensive research, Ed and Lorraine learned that a number of deaths and murders had occurred in the immediate vicinity of the Union Graveyard (the man in Robert's car had been murdered). It was only a week later when Robert called the Warrens with his strange story.

In a case like this, you might think that hard-core, tangible proof would be hard to come upon. It's not.

According to Ed, "We have gotten proof from photographs and video film. The White Lady was a murder victim and is now what we call earthbound. I decided to settle this once and for all, and I went out there in my van. I would sit out and watch toward this swamp in the graveyard. On this one night, all of a sudden, I heard this woman crying and I could see bioluminescent lights which are part of the electromagnetic field drawn from the trees. This happens through a process called psychokinesis. So, I'm watching the forming of the lady. I picked up the camcorder but can't see anything. I put it in a tripod and was thrilled when I looked at it later and could see her calling me. But something that I didn't see until I viewed the tape were these little dark figures that looked like poodles. Then a dark, cloaked figure approached "The Woman" to push her away. We now have people that have been going there since September and you should see the pictures that are coming out." (Ed also reports that some thrill-seekers report seeing the apparition of a solid-like ghost, resembling a sea captain.)

We work closely with police departments... a murdered girl came back and described the murderer to us...of course in the U.S., there is a problem, as we need more proof.

Another one of the Warrens' 40 current cases involves a frightened man who resides in a Rhode Island mansion. According to Ed, it involves the now deceased former owner and "we feel human combustion could have occurred there."

When asked if he ever gets spooked or frightened, Ed Warren chuckles and says, "I am frightened many times. We probably get more scared then you would. I've been cut on the arm, hit and bruised and I am not the kind of guy who frightens easily."

The two investigators have seen countless items thrown around rooms, people levitated, apparitions and demonic forces hard at work. They are presently working on a murder case in Virginia in which the key witness is the murder victim herself. "We work closely with police departments who need help with ritual murders," says Ed. "In this case, a murdered girl came back and described the murderer to us . Lorraine could see it. She is very clairvoyant. I may not see anything and she'll walk into a room and see á spirit. We know who he is but of course in the U.S., there is a problem, as we need more proof."

Psychic researchers like the Warrens are indeed a rare breed. Because of the nature of their profession, there exists a number of frauds and con artists, but they stand out head and foot above any potential competition. In their travels, which take them around the world, the Warrens often use funds from their lecture tours to investigate cases in which the victims or the "afflicted" may not have fee dollars. Their income comes from their lecture circuit and from the sale of some of their books which include, The Amityville Horror, The Haunted, The Devil in Connecticut and most recently, Werewolf.

Locally, Ed and Lorraine have worked in the Boston area on investigations that have involved ghosts, poltergeists and demons. "We've been called to Boston many times, says Ed. " There was a situation with old farmhouse right outside of Boston. A family had moved in from NYC and the wife had always wanted a farm. As soon as they moved in, lights were on and off and things would break down. Their little girl was staring sullenly in her bedroom at a ghost. Then the mother would see it by her bed. It was an elderly man who would stand at the end of the bed, and he would look at her. While this was happening, she would try to wake her husband but couldn't. He was in psychic paralyzation phantomania, which is something that happens when a force takes control over you. These are houses that we call 'houses of evil' and in these cases, it's usually best when the people involved just locked their door and left."

YOU SPELL POTATO, I SPELL POTATOE

BY KATHY MATHESON

With the presidential election coming sooner than George Bush would like, this week's comedy section is devoted to the most biting and sophisticated type of humor - political satire. Conservatives will note that most of the humor is at their expense, but that's only because Republicans have been in the Oval Office for the past 12 years. (They probably won't have to worry about that much longer.)

To coincide with Election '92, the Levinson Kane Gallery (14 Newbury St., through Nov. 14) currently features an exhibit called "The Body Politic," a very cynical look at politics in America. Most notable is work by street artist Robbie Conal, whose scathing indictments of the Bush Administration and the Supreme Court were found plastered all over California last year.

Robbie Conal

Your local bookstore also stocks a wealth of political humor, both illustrated and written. The latest collection by Doonesbury cartoonist Garry Trudeau is called What is it, Tink, is Pan in Trouble? and features a quote from one of Trudeau's most common targets, Vice President Dan Quayle, on the book's cover: "Who cares what a comic strip may or may not say about me or anyone else?" Hmmm.

And then there's Rolling Stone columnist P.J. O'Rourke, whose new book Parliament of Whores is subtitled A Lone Humorist Attempts to Explain the Entire U.S. Government. A sample of chapter titles: "Why God is a Republican and Santa Claus is a Democrat;" "The Three Branches of Government: Money, Television and Bullshit;" "Would You Kill Your Mother to Pave I-95?;" and "Our Government: What the Fuck Do They Do All Day and Why Does it Cost so Goddamned Much Money?" If O'Rourke can explain that, he's got my vote.

For all the artists out there, you must at least see Berkeley Breathed's Politically, Fashionably and Aerodynamically Incorrect, the first collection of his comic strip "Outland." The cover shows a family crowded together on one side of a bench and that lovable penguin Opus on the other end, reading a copy of "Whale Giblet Fondues" by Marilyn Quayle. In the middle of the bench, a young boy moons Opus; however, his tender tush is not exposed to the reader because of a big black sticker that reads, "DO NOT REMOVE by order of the N.E.A." Bravo!

A bi-partisan audience will enjoy Don Novello's Citizen Lazlo, two volumes of letters written by Lazlo Toth to various corporations, politicians and foreign dignitaries, and the responses he received. Dec. 5, 1991: "Dear Mr. Sununu: When the going gets tough, the tough get going - and the weak fire their subordinates!" Toth's correspondence also includes letters of advice to Deng Xiaoping, Raisa Gorbachev, Jimmy Carter, the Sultan of Brunei and the Coca-Cola corporation.

And for the kid in all of us, there's Where's Dan Quayle?, a book based on the popular children's series Where's Waldo? Find Dan in the Launch Control Room of the Kennedy Space Center: "Those scientists sure look smart... Maybe next time they'll let me push the blast-off button!" ❑

In a fitting role and a fine performance, Joe Pesci plays the squat and fast-talking '40s shutterbug Leon Bernstein, who unwlttingly becomes involved in a plot involving international conspirators and the Mob. Director /writer Howard Franklin incorporates sensuous visual imagery into the film, with '40s-style lingo for dash. Barbara Hershey is Bernstein's love interest, a society gal and club owner who feels out of place among the well-to-do. Ultimately Hershey's performance in unmoving, but Pesci compensates and handles his first major lead role with steadiness and assurance. The plot resoluation may come a little quick for your left hemisphere, but your right one is sure to enjoy the aesthetics of the film.

"Irrepressibly Cute"

Stephen Frears' cynical comedy is irrepressibly cute and doesn't have the bite of his earlier films (The Grifters, Dangerous Liasons). But it's an illuminating glimpse at the way the press and public loosely conspire to thrust the illustrious epithet of the film's title onto whomever they choose. Dustin Hoffman plays Bernie LaPlante, a grubby, two-bit thief who, against his "professional" instincts, risks his life by anonymously rescuing several passengers trapped in a downed plane. One is a prize-winning television journalist (Geena Davis), who coincidentally is on the lookout for a story worthy of LaPlante's heroics. She and her colleagues search for the mysterious hero. A handsome and homeless veteran (Andy Garcia) steps forward as the much-sought-after risk taker, and LaPlante is sent to prison for trafficking in stolen goods, unable to claim his reward. Will the real hero be revealed?

Under Siege

A Blank Slate

Ruthless terrorists take over a battleship, and only one man can stop them. . . . Steven Seagal makes a solid attempt to join the A-list of Hollywood action heroes in this big-budget thriller, which plays lot like a horizontal Die Hard, only not as good. It is, however, Seagal's best movie to date, with enough violent deaths and explosions to keep things moving along, although the outcome is never in doubt. Movies of this type are really only as good as their bad guys, and Tommy Lee Jones and Gary Busey, two erstwhile Oscar nominees, are more than adequate for the task - they have enough bad skin and big teeth between them to equip three terrorists. Both overact a bit, but it's a refreshing contrast to the minimalist, shall we say approach to acting taken by Seagal, whose empty visage is not so much a stone face as a blank slate.

Consenting Adults

"How To Kill A Thrill"

To regard Consenting Adults as a thriller is to severely strain the word. Kevin Kline and Mary Elizabeth Mastrantonio play a bored suburban couple who find the antidote for their tedium in the new next-door neighbors: Kevin Spacey, cultivated in the art of risk-taking, wins their friendship via a series of sly maneuvers, as his sensuous wife (Rebecca Miller) captures Kline's attention. Kline is lured into a sexual wife-swapping, ushering in the so-called suspense. A lethargic pace is sustained to the end, as we anxiously await the obligatory electrifying showdown that doesn't show up. The camera, addicted to the slow pan, moves as though it were caught in a traffic jam, and seldom are the pans punctuated with sharp cuts that result in the requisite frisson. The script, like the editing, is flavorless.

Reservoir Dogs: A Down and Dirty Escapade

BY TIM LEMIRE

Reservoir Dogs, the story of a bungled jewelry heist by six independent crooks acting as a group, is a forceful, albeit flawed, drama that is not for the weak of heart. Writer/director Quentin Tarentino delivers dialogue that is crude and rude in Mametian fashion, with a spattering of violence that is visceral and unsettling - as when we see thief Mr. White (Harvey Keitel) shoot two policemen to death through their squad car windshield before they can escape from their safety belts.

Reservoir Dogs marks Tarentino's debut as writer and director, and considering the flaws in the film, he may have done better to concentrate on one task instead of attempting both the first time out. Some members of the ensemble cast are below par as well, making Dogs a hit, but slightly off target.

With unusual bravado, crime boss Joe Cabot (Lawrence Tierney) assembles six thieves to pull of a diamond heist in broad daylight. After a completely irrelevant diner scene with the dirty half-dozen, the credits give way to the heist gone kerflooie: the gang scatters, leaving cops and civilians dead — a major screw-up. Mr. White (Harvey Keitel) takes a wounded Mr. Orange (Tim Roth) to the warehouse base to await help. (The colors are code names; the crooks don't even know each others' identity.)

Mr. Pink arrives (Steve Buscemi) frantically alleging that a rat within the group has set them up. So begins the bickering, the paranoia and the chaos as the gang reassembles piecemeal, trying to salvage the heist and weed out the stoolie.

Harvey Keitel in Quentin Tarantino's "Reservoir Dogs".

The strength of Reservoir Dogs lies in the interaction of the thieves, as they argue and attempt to reason and act like "professionals." ("If you're a psychotic, you can't be a professional," quips Keitel, who hands in a lukewarm performance as Mr. White.) While Tarentino's script affords his actors the opportunity to endow the movie with strength based on character instead of action, not all of the boys are up to the task.

Michael Madsen has the opportunity to make Mr. Blond the most compelling character and he ends up making him the emptiest. Imagine a young Elvis playing Flannery O'Connor's Misfit and you have the sadistic yet cool-handed Mr. Blond. Madsen is fine when Blond is the uninterested tough guy, but ultimately he fails to show us where Blond's darker interior comes from; Madsen is danger without depth.

As Mr. Orange, Tim Roth (Vincent & Theo) is reminiscent in voice and gesture to James Woods, and succeeds in showing a range from cockiness to fright - to vulnerability with a bullet in his belly. Only better is the fast-talking, seedy Mr. Pink, as played by Buscemi. He shoots off his lines with keen, live-wire mastery: "Where's the can in this dungeon? I gotta take a squirt."

Tarentino is to be credited for not handing in a textbook linear narrative based on formula. His attention to language is that of a playwright: there is a brutal exchange between Chris Penn's Eddy and Madsen's Mr. Blond that is course yet comical, repulsive in its content yet fascinating in its interplay. Despite some slow moments in flashback, Reservoir Dogs does keep our attention and interest with its mixture of drama and comedy.

As a director, Tarentino shows less prowess: when Mr. Blond tortures a hostage police officer, Tarentino lifts the camera eye out of sight, as if the scene is too horrible to watch. It isn't; in such a straightforward and raw drama, the move feels like Tarentino is manipulating the audience. Regardless, Tarentino's is an admirable debut, and Reservoir Dogs has an appealing cultish feel about it, complete with a soundtrack from the '70s.

While there may be no honor among these characters in Tarentino's film, there is honor in the effort Reservoir Dogs represents, that of a competent writer on his first outing. ❑

Pure Country

Straight to Hell

BY ANTHONY LEIBS

The incursion of country into the mainstream continues with Pure Country, in which country superstar George Strait makes his big-screen debut. Strait plays Dusty Chandler, a veteran country singer who is becoming uncomfortable with his success. He fills arenas with 25,000 adoring fans and his show features giant stages, elaborate lighting, smoke machines, exploding fireworks, etc. Dusty's music is getting lost in the middle of this glitzed-up, overhyped tour and he impulsively walks away one night to head for the hinterland in search of his musical roots.

What he finds there, is unfortunately, neither interesting nor illuminating. Once Dusty arrives, there isn't much for him to do. He doesn't experience any sort of epiphany, re-evaluate his life or even do much thinking. He does (predictably) fall in love with a pretty young woman named Harley (Isabel Glasser), who is working to become a champion horsewoman, so she can compete in rodeos and win enough money to save the family ranch. Their romance is not a cop-out, exactly, but an easy out, and a way of avoiding any real questions the film has raised about the nature of fame or the downside of success.

Strait, a two-time Country Music Association Entertainer of The Year award winner, has a tiny presence as an actor. His flat delivery and inexpressive countenance limit his range; there is no suggestion of depth, wit or experience beneath his blandly handsome face. He's a stiff.

Equally ineffective is Leslie Ann Warren as Dusty's manipulative manager, Lulu. As written, it's a somewhat thankless role, but Warren makes it worse by overplaying the nasty/nice aspects of her character. Her southern accent may fade in and out, but her teeth remain constant: big and white, every single tooth is revealed in her many smiles; her lips skin back in lupine delight at the slightest provocation. Warren miscalculates badly; she overacts as much as Strait underacts, so they never connect. John Doe does much better as Earl, Dusty's drummer and longtime friend. Although a former punker with the band X, Doe is as authentically country as anyone in the movie, and seems to be one of the few pop stars who has true screen presence.

There's not much story here - or drama.

We know Dusty will return to his band, and that he and Harley will stay together. But worst of all: no humor. There are no sharp edges, and no smart observations. Music however, is in abundance: 14 songs on the soundtrack, and we hear most of them in their entirety. Strait sings five songs during the movie; he's a fine singer, and seems much more relaxed (or relieved) when he gets a chance to sing, rather than act. This film will probably please his legions of fans; the rest of us will remain unconvinced and unconverted. ❑

"Lethal Barrage of Words"

This excellent cinematic adaptation of David Mamet's 1984 Pulitzer Prize-winning play loses none of the original's brutal power. It centers on four salesmen (superbly played by Jack Lemmon, Al Pacino, Ed Harris and Alan Arkin) who sell worthless real estate. When the jobs of two are threatened and their valuable customer leads are stolen, their survival instincts go into overdrive. Mamet's jeering, nonsermonizing screenplay is a lethal barrage of words, whose target is free enterprise, American-style. Every character is depraved, and although the salesmen-protagonists are hucksters, Mamet has less antipathy toward them than toward the other principals. One of the most strangely telling scenes has Jack Lemmon smoothly conveying the details of a close to an engrossed Al Pacino. J.S.

Bob Roberts

"Politics is Comedy"

In this clever, extremely funny send-up of the political process, Tim Robbins stars as Bob Roberts, a country singer/songwriter-turned-Republican-Senatorial-candidate. But Roberts is not half of what he appears to be, and that is what one unknown reporter (Giancarlo Esposito) is determined to tell the general public. Robbins, who also directed the film, parodies Roberts and the Republican party to the point of hilarity (just listen to the lyrics of Roberts' songs); unfortunately, Democrats may be the only ones able to fully appreciate the satire. Wind

"How the Cup Was Won"

Wind, the story of how the United States lost the America's Cup to the Aussies and won it back, contains all the formulaic elements of a good time at the movies, but if you don't know your jib from your mizzenmast, most of the sailing jargon will breeze past you. Matthew Modine plays Parker, the famous fumbler who lost for the U.S. the first time, and Jennifer Grey plays his ex-partner and girlfriend who will help him take back the Cup. Modine rarely looks as if he wants the Cup back - it's even more questionable if he wants the woman back; Grey hands in the better performance. Skillful shots of dueling ships on the high seas is impressive, and the road to the inevitable ending - America wins big - is swift and sleek. A good movie. T.S.L.

"Another Flawed New World Order"

Gerard Depardieu hands in a commendable performance as Columbus, but he is hindered by a facile and slow-moving screeplay from Roselyne Bosch, heavy-handed symbolism from director Ridley Scott, and an overwhelming score from Vangelis. 1492 is hardly a dud; visually striking and rich in texture, the film appeal to the senses, but to little more. Director Scott seems to be bent on construing Columbus as a messianic figure; not a disagreeable premise, all politlcal correctness aside, but with wooden crosses being struck by lightning, Depardieu riding a mule, and natives being crucified, 1492 becomes a ship you may want to get off of rather early. T.S.L.

A Brief History of Time

"Heroic and Sensitive Homage"

Similar in name only to the best-selling book, A Brief History of Time is a documentary about the life and ideas of the physicist Stephen Hawking, a leading authority on the workings of the universe. The details of his life are interwoven with selected cursory discussions of concepts from the book, such as black holes and the big bang theory. In effect, we are presented with an heroic, sensitive homage to a brilliant, resilient scientist who was stricken with a disabling and degenerative muscular disease while in college. Unhappily, Time's forcefulness is fragile. Hawking appears throughout and communicates only with the aid of a computer, is nonetheless eloquent: his thoughts range from his childhood to the fate of the universe, and thus capture the expansive quality of the universe he studies. ABSOLUT UNVEILING

ALL PHOTOS BY MIM MICHELOVE

It was a collaboration of talent from all sectors: Michel Roux, President and Chief Executive Officer of Carillon Importers Ltd. (Absolut's parent company), Tony DeLuz, "Absolut Massachusetts" artist and Boston native, and Donna Netwig, Co-chair of the Boston chapter of DIFFA - The Design Industries Foundation for Aids. These three, and many more, attended the unveiling of Tony DeLuz' vision of Massachusetts on Tuesday, October 27 at the Copley Society, on Boston's prestigious Newbury Street.

As part of Absolut Vodka's commitment to the arts and to AIDS research, Michel Roux pledged $3.5 million on behalf of Absolut - the cost needed to underwrite the two-year program called Absolut Statehood.

"We have two principal objectives in undertaking this two-year, national program," said Roux. "The first is to give one artist in every state, plus the nation's capital, the opportunity to present his or her vision of their home state to millions of Americans - and to become more widely known in the process. The second is to make a major contribution to the fight against a disease that is striking growing numbers of Americans, including many artists."

Roux has chosen one artist from every state, as well as Washington D.C., to paint a vision of their home state. Each work will be unveiled to the public on a bi-weekly basis and in alphabetical order in USA TODAY. Three hundred limited edition lithographs of each artwork, signed and numbered by the artist, will be sold to the public at a cost of $300 each.

At the unveiling of Absolut Massachusetts, DIFFA spokesperson Lisa B. Martin said "Based on the great demand and critic's reviews of already-released works, values are expected to soar on these works because they are collector's items. It's very rare that this kind of force gets behind such a collection of artists. A number of the works commissioned by other artists have already increased in value."

All revenue from sales of the prints will go to Design Industries Foundation for Aids (DIFFA), a national foundation that raises and distributes funds to local organizations supporting people with AIDS in communities throughout the U.S.

TONY DeLUZ AND MICHEL ROUX CELEBRATE THEIR COLLABORATION WITH ABSOLUT STATEHOOD.

Both Martin and Co-chair of the Boston Chapter of DIFFA Donna Netwig attended the Boston unveiling, during which Netwig thanked Absolut, Tony DeLuz and the Boston community for supporting their cause. According to Martin, Netwig has "pulled us a long way. Since 1984, on a national level, DIFFA has raised $6 million, so a contribution like Absolut's, which is projected to earn $4.5 million by December of 1993, is a big one. They as a company have made a very visual and vocal message in that they support the AIDS issue as a corporation. Very few companies have had the courage to do that. So DIFFA and all people affected by AIDS will feel the benefit of this corporate support."

Absolut's commitment to the arts began in 1985 when Michel Roux commissioned artist Andy Warhol's dramatic and colorful depiction of the Absolut bottle. The program has since gone on to include an exhilarating range of works by more than 300 artists. Nearly all have been showcased as part of the brand's award-winning advertising program.

Executive Director of the Copley Society of Boston, Georgiana Druchyk says, "We are supporting DIFFA in our way by donating prints of our artists to help raise funds for them." The Copley Society has been responsive not only to DIFFA, but also to the immediate Boston community. The Society offers a monthly educational program to Boston high school students interested in the fine arts. "We're offering these workshops for 20 students at a time with the help of our teaching members who volunteer their time."

"Absolut Massachusetts" will be on display at the Copley Society for the next three weeks. The Boston Chapter of DIFFA will have one lithograph on display at the DIFFA Boutique in the Boston Design Center in South Boston. To purchase a lithograph, call 1-800-221-0765.

"Catch Some Rays" This Winter

Be a Kid Again at the NE Aquarium

BY KATHY MATHESON

DO NOT TAP ON THE GLASS! DO NOT FEED THE ANIMALS! DO NOT STICK VARIOUS APPENDAGES INTO THE ANIMALS' CAGES! DO NOT PASS GO; DO NOT COLLECT. . . .

Enough! I didn't want to feed that stupid duck-billed platypus, anyway. But why do they have all those stupid rules? And how am I supposed to learn about animals if I can't touch them?

Luckily, the New England Aquarium has broken the look-but-don't-touch taboo with two different exhibits. In the new offering "Catch Some Rays," you not only learn about the cownose rays gliding around in the tank, but you are also allowed - nay, encouraged - to reach your hand in and pet these "pilots of the sea."

Rays are also referred to as "pancake sharks," as they belong to the same class as sharks and both have, according to Aqualog magazine, "characteristically rough sandpaper-like skin made up of thousands of rows of tooth-like scales called dermal denticles." Dermal denticles? Translation, please.

"Slimy and leathery," said Aquarium visitor and ray petter Mike Stewart of Boston. "Like the seat in my Mom's car."

Although you do pet living, swimming, real rays in the tank, these rays have been "fixed" - that is, their stingers have been removed. Ordinarily, the whip tail of a cownose ray has a poison barb on the end of it, and although not usually deadly, it still delivers an extremely painful venom that attacks the victim's nervous system. The stingers are made of a material similar to human fingernails, and were simply clipped off for this exhibit (they grow back slowly without any permanent damage to the rays).

People are encouraged to touch the animals at the New England Aquarium exhibit "Catch Some Rays".

Possession of a poisonous barb would lead most humans to label rays "dangerous," but the truth is that the stinger is used mainly for defense, not offense; rays pretty much keep to themselves and only eat plankton, small fish or shellfish - not humans.

The other touchable exhibit at the Aquarium is the new, expanded tidepool called "Edge of the Sea." Here, you are encouraged to pick up different sea animals you might find in any tidepool in New England: sea urchins, starfish, hermit crabs, horseshoe crabs and sea anemones. In tanks at one end of the tidepool, don't miss the seahorses. (No, you can't ride them.)

There are also many permanent exhibits you may not have noticed before, so here's a floor-by-floor sample. At the top of the first ramp, go see the "hiccuping" fish. At first, you'll probably want to stop at this tank anyway because the large groupers that inhabit it are about five feet long and weigh several hundred pounds (if not more). The hiccuping comes from one of the male groupers when his body jerks and elicits a definite "BOOM!" - a sound that is clearly audible to the human ear outside the tank. (It's called stridulation, and is thought to be a show of dominance.)

Most notable on the third floor is the "Save Boston Harbor" interactive display, where you learn a lot about environmental pollution and the role you can play to alleviate any further damage. You'll probably leave with a feeling of general disgust for the human race, but with any luck it will make you think twice about polluting your natural surroundings. Also, take a swing by the tank with the blue lobster - fewer than one in 20 million lobsters has a blue shell.

On the ground floor, try some shadowplay with the penguins. Watching these birds collect rocks for their nests may give you a warm fuzzy feeling inside, but there's no interaction between penguin and human. If you really want to play with the penguins, try placing your hand in front of one of the spotlamps and making a shadow on the floor of the tank. The penguins will think the dark spot in the water is a fish, and will follow it wherever it goes. It's sort of like giving a kitten a string to chase. But remember, DON'T FEED THE ANIMALS!

"Catch Some Rays" follows the exhibit "Fantasy, Fears and Fish," but in a way, it is also a companion as it teaches both adults and kids that fish can be friendly. So let your childlike - not childish - curiosity get the best of you. Come on down and catch some rays. ❑

And A Nightingale Sang

An Old Song That's Improved With Age

BY MARY SHEPPARD-EARON

Just a bit west of Boston's glaring lights and rude motorists is Newton Highlands, a small town where a stone church sits with lowered skirts amidst little shops and cafes. Inside the church is another small place where the light is golden, piano keys tinkle and the tea kettle whistles all day long. It is where the Stott family lives. Outside is not really Newton Highlands but war-torn London, and Hitler is invading because it's World War II.

"Da" sits at the piano, cheerily playing those nostalgic period songs and "Mam" runs in and out of the tiny house - always scatterbrained with a good deed to do.

Brown-haired daughter, Helen, ("The Cripple") narrates the story, telling of her grandfather who is madcap but dear and who lives there sometimes; her "Da," who herds them into the bomb shelter when the siren rings; and, "Mam," who prays to her religious statues.

There is blond-haired sister, Joyce, who is fleshy and passionate, and married Eric early in the story, only to watch him immediately go off to war. Upon his return, she finds him a stranger and struggles to become friends, lovers - and ultimately - husband and wife.

Finally, there is Helen's love, Norman. A soldier brought home by Eric, Norman brings out the beauty, dancer and the romantic passion in the young woman. They fall in love but their dream world is broken apart eventually because of his marriage to another woman.

Matt Fleming and Andrea Southwick appear in the nostalgic comedy "And a Nightingale Sang", playing at the New Repertory Theatre.

Nightingale, a play that Dan Quayle would certainly approve of, is about the enduring love of a family. As a romantic, quirky comedy, it is a rich beef stew story that is perfect on these chilly autumn nights. In these oh-so-gloomy years of struggle that expressers and appreciators of art face, it is important to patronize the small theaters, like The New Rep. Unlike the large, elaborate entertainment centers that are popular with corporate sponsors, the smaller theatres generally don't receive much homage or funding. But it is in these intimate surroundings where audiences are not distracted by sound system breakdowns and elaborate sets that the quiet voices of new playwrights, old but little-produced plays, and able, talented casts can be heard. These are the days when, more than ever, the theatre industry is an act of love. These are the days when those involved are good, and will become the brilliant and committed. The cast of And a Nightingale Sang exemplifies this belief. ❑

DINING

CORNUCOPIA

If Only Your "Evening Out" Happened Every Night

BY MEG WORDEN AND MARCUS G. APICIUS

Cornucopia. Doesn't the name at once conjure up a vision of good food in glorious abundance, together with some fine wine, and someone to pamper you? Just as you would expect from its name, both food and wine are taken seriously at Cornucopia, and whether you decide to attend one of the themed food and wine dinners or order from the regular menu (as we did), you will find some irresistible choices. Cornucopia has long been a pioneer in this respect, and must have been one of the first local restaurants whose menu included wine suggestions with each appetizer and entree. Here, you will find an excellent, well rounded wine list, and professional, attentive service that will at once put you at ease.

Contemporary describes both the food and decor at Cornucopia. As the restaurant is scheduled to relocate to Back Bay at the end of the year, we won't overly dwell on the decor except to say that the setting in this converted townhouse is comfortable and spacious, and good use has been made of the different levels to create the illusion of intimacy (Intriguing indirect wall lighting is provided through stained glass fixtures and contemporary prints decorate the walls, with different artists featured every two months).

Several features stand out about the menu. Because wine is considered an integral part of the meal, selections available by the glass have been chosen with care. As indicated above, each item (except salad) comes with a recommendation as to which one would best accompany it. Each dish is carefully described with just the right amount of detail, and without the superfluous rhetoric beloved of far too many restaurants these days. And the prints on the wall (all for sale) are listed in the menu.

Our favorite appetizer was some glorious roasted figs stuffed with prosciutto, leek and walnuts and served with a very mellow goat cheese, a bitter green salad and roasted red and yellow peppers ($8.75). The prosciutto stuffing (whose flavor reminded us rather of a confit) gave a lovely salty counterpoint to the sweetness of both the figs and the peppers. The only flaw was the grittiness of the greens. The same greens and the same problem marred the otherwise delicious smoked bluefish with fried garlic and spicy Asian black bean sauce ($7.50). Here, the sweetness of the sauce contrasted successfully with the dense smoky flavor permeating the fish. Another appetizer we sampled was a poblano chili stuffed with scallop and lobster mousse ($9). The pepper must have been blanched, as it was not as hot as it could have been; the mousse had good texture and a subtle flavor; we liked it, but couldn't really distinguish the seafood components. We were very taken by the accompanying sweet and mellow sweet corn relish and would have been more than happy to devour a whole bowl of it.

Angela Wooldridge

When the entrees arrived, we all went crazy over the duck ($17). The breast had been roasted to perfection, and the leg made into a confit. With it came a wonderful sour cherry sauce. Not only did the two parts of the duck provide a contrast in texture, they also perfectly complemented each other in taste, as the more austere breast had been flavored with the sour cherries, while the leg provided a sweet, rich contrast. The ribeye steak ($20.50) was almost (but not quite) as good. It was described as "herb blackened," and this outer layer imparted an intriguing hotness to it. Additional flavorings and textures were provided by a mellow roasted garlic sauce together with some delicious blue cheese that blended nicely into the sauce, plus some very good shrimp. Excellent though it was, we were not convinced that the shrimp belonged with this dish; it seemed rather like overkill, especially given the large portions on the plates. (This, in fact was our only real criticism of the entrees). A little less of each item, or fewer accompaniments, would not only enhance the appearance but also make the plates look less overwhelming. The oven roasted lobster ($22) was perfectly cooked, as was the accompanying tagliatelle, which was deliciously flavored with ginger. Fried wontons, a black bean sauce and the sesame honey glaze rounded out the oriental theme. The garnish - sweet pea tendrils - was nothing short of sensational.

The white chocolate bread pudding is justly known as "Cornucopia's trademark." Crisp outside, soft inside and so light that it's gone before you know it. (Incidentally, it goes perfectly with ice cream). We fared less well with other desserts. The rum in the rummy creme caramel was a little overwhelming, tending to overpower the caramel part of the otherwise excellent flan. The dark chocolate terrine was deliciously dense, and its accompanying fresh mango sauce was equally delicious, but somehow the two did not go together. Never mind, all was forgiven when we saw the list of dessert wines and discovered that a beerenauslese was actually available by the glass for a trifling $6 (if you've ever priced this wine, you will know why we were so excited). This proved to be the perfect end to what was undoubtedly one of our more pleasant evenings out. ❑

Note: Changes in the summer menu are due soon, but the style remains essentially the same. We were assured, however, that the white chocolate bread pudding will remain.

BY MARGE CHRYSSOSTOMIDIS & PETER MCNAMARA

EXCUSE ME, BUT IS THAT A MONET YOU'RE EATING?
Art meets food at Le Bocage (72 Bigelow Ave., Watertown) from November 9-14. During this period, a Monet dinner series based on the book Monet Cooks by Claire Joyce will be held, with live chamber music provided. For reservations, call 923-1210. Incidentally, Le Bocage recently introduced a three course fixed price menu ranging in price from $25-33.

YOU'LL NEVER LOSE YOUR COOKIES
We are great fans of the cookies made by Dedham-based Cookie Express (especially the hermits). They are the kind you just can't stop eating, once you start. You can find them at several local outlets, such as Legal Seafood, Bildners, Herrell's Ice Cream and Cremaldi's Market. You can also have them shipped by Cross Country Cookie, their mail order division. Call 1-800-422-2055 for information.

HUNGRY FOR THE HOTEL?
When you are looking for somewhere to dine on that special occasion, you can't beat the elegance of some of the hotel dining rooms. One that doesn't get half the attention it deserves is Bello Mondo in the Copley Marriott. Here Oliver Klopf, the very talented chef, will delight you with his innovative Italian menu. We can especially recommend the appetizer of crispy roasted Muscovy duck breast served on field greens with walnut oil vinaigrette. There is a set three course menu for $29.95 that changes weekly in addition to the a la carte offerings. For information and reservations, call 236-5800 ext. 5627.

CELEBRITY CHEFS
Regional American food is gaining in popularity, and if you'd like to learn more about it, there are a couple of interesting offerings coming up at the Cambridge School of Culinary Arts. On November 2, Jane Butel, the Southwest's leading culinary authority, will lecture and demonstrate as part of the CSCA's Celebrity Chef Series. November 10 offers a 4-hour session on Cajun and Creole cuisine with Mary Gauthier, a Louisiana native now on the CSCA staff. For information about these and forthcoming classes call 354-3836.

THE RAW TRUTH
We have heard great reports of Kaya, the recently opened Korean-Japanese restaurant at 581 Boylston Street, Boston (tel. 236-5858). Food is beautifully presented, and the sushi is surely going to give other local restaurants a run for their money.

FOOD TO LEAVE YOU TONGUE-THAI-ED
Here's a great bargain for fans of Thai food. Thai Gourmet, winner of the Improper Bostonian's Best Thai Restaurant award is offering 20% off all menu items through November 4. Not only is the food terrific, but the service is extraordinary. Their address is 1155 Dorchester Avenue, Savin Hill.

PEOPLE IN THE NEWS:
Congratulations to Dawn Pitcher, waitress at Frogg Lane Grille, who won the Bundy Look-alike Contest at the Great Yankee Rib Cookoff with her impersonation of Kelly...Welcome to Eric Frahlich, new manager of the Bristol Lounge in the Four Seasons Hotel. And congratulations to former server Craig McGinnis, also of the Bristol Lounge, on his recent promotion to Assistant Room Service Manager. We'll miss his friendly smiling face.

OTHER NEWS:
Cafe Coffee is opening up a branch at The Wursthaus in Harvard Square...A belated welcome to Shining Sea, a new restaurant that opened up on Beacon Hill at 21A Beacon Street, tel. 523-0786; seafood, sandwiches, pasta, salads and soup are offered...Construction for the Santa Fe Cafe will be starting soon; it will be located in South Station. We understand it will be a food court, and will be owned by the Rebecca's Cafe group...Italian wine dinners are planned at Il Capriccio for November 8 and 9, featuring some excellent wines shipped by M.S. Walker. Other wine dinners will be scheduled later in November. For more information, call 894-2234 ❑

Warren Tavern,

2 Pleasant St., Charlestown, 241-8142
Take a step back into history this Sunday, approximately 212 years. The Warren Tavern is one of the oldest restaurants in the country and the first place to be rebuilt after Charlestown was burned down in the Battle of Bunker Hill. The Tavern features an original decor of low beamed ceilings, church pew benches and a 25 foot oak bar. Cuisine is straight forward American with a little international flair. Brunch served from 12:00 to 3:30. $4.95 - $6.95

Nouveau Riche

Nouveaus From Around The World

BY JONATHON ALSOP

As much as I love wine, my feelings about Beaujolais Nouveaus are mixed.

On the one hand, it's a riot. This brand spanking new wine rolls out of the vats and is consumed suddenly, within a few weeks of its release, in this spontaneous love-in. People who never drink anything but white zin all year long suddenly wolf down the Nouveau like there's no tomorrow, and in this case, there is no tomorrow. And it's a beautiful thing to see.

On the other hand, after the novelty wears off and the wine runs out, everything returns to normal, and the afterglow never seems to last very long. Sometimes, I think because the image of the wine is so relaxed and casual and unpretentious, people imagine the way they feel about Nouveau they could never hope to feel about a "real" wine. Naturally, their feelings never transfer, so to speak. Although Beaujolais Nouveau is a huge financial and marketing success, it never really manages to make a difference to America's wine culture.

But here, it's much too serious. Being strong over time is left to other wines, the cru Beaujolais: Brouilly, Morgon and Moulin-a-Vent, for instance. Nouveau is a wine that was born too soon and meant to die young without ever really accomplishing anything.

I always buy the Nouveau two bottles at a time: one to drink, and one to pour over my head. I recommend this to everyone.

Blanchard's has an interesting selection of California Nouveaus to complement the obligatory DuBoef. Pecota Vineyards Gamay Nouveau will be around $7-8, available by November 13. Preston Vineyards first ever Gamay Nouveau will be wonderful if it's as good as their other wines. The Preston will be closer to $10. According to wine boss Mike Gilly, "We carried every Nouveau there was last year. Two years ago, we carried one. This year, we're splitting the difference."

Boston's Downtown Cafe will host a breakfast party on Saturday, November 14. Bouchard Nouveau is scheduled to arrive from the airport by limousine at 6:30 a.m., so call 338-7037 for reservations.

Brookline Liquor Mart is DuBoef Nouveau's home away from home. BLM will carry Gamay Nouveau and Vin Nouveau around the first week of November. Nouveau Villages arrives November 19, with a free barrel tasting scheduled for November 21 from 2 to 4 p.m.

Chestnut Hill Wine Cellar will begin informal wine tastings as soon as the wine arrives, starting probably around November 19.❑

The Soup Dragons Throw A Halloween Bash at The Channel

BY SANDER WOLF

Imagine having the power to create your own "fantasy concert." The thrill of picking a night, sculpting it with your favorite bands and then actually being there to listen and dance the night away is a privilege few possess. However, when you're leading a band as successful as the Soup Dragons like singer/ songwriter/ guitarist/ producer Sean Dickson has, things like this come fairly easily. And luckily (for both him and us), Dickson's fantasy concert is something we can all look forward to.

Of course, no fantasy is perfect. There was actually another line-up for the show that didn't quite work out. "Arrested Development were going to do the tour, but then their record took off. And then the House of Pain were going to do it but then their record took off too," explains Dickson. But the current line-up of The Soup Dragons, The Tom Tom Club, Black Sheep and James comes very close to his vision.

So even if the show's minutely flawed to some eyes and ears, the four bands, as sales figures for their current album indicate, will be hard to resist. And of course, there's still the added draw of it all taking place on the night of Halloween.

Of the four bands, The Soup Dragons, which is currently sporting the album Hot Wired (Mercury), is the most accessible. With its pastiche of Seventies and Nineties stylings and the pounding singles "Pleasure" and "Divine Thing," the album quickly swept up the charts and has remained there since - easily topping the band's last album Lovegod with its breakaway cover of the Stones' "I'm Free." The Tom Tom Club, which is led by former Talking Heads-turned-producers Tina Weymouth and Chris Frantz, is currently coasting on the grooves of its single "Sunshine and Ecstasy," while Black Sheep is pumping up listeners with the heavy beat of the singles "The Choice Is Yours" and "Similak Child."

MONSTER MASHING WITH THE SOUP DRAGONS

TOM TOM CLUB
JAMES AND BLACK SHEEP
AT THE CHANNEL,
SAT. OCTOBER 31.
CALL TICKET MASTER FOR TICKETS.OR THE PARADISE FOR MORE INFO.

And then there's James, designated to share the opening slot with Black Sheep. It seems like James is the poor little band that everyone picks on for no good reason. The band has gone through record companies like Kleenex even though its full sound and previous albums like James [originally released as Gold Mother a year earlier. -Ed.], Stutter and Strip-Mine deserve a much more stable situation. But with the band's new release on London/PLG, Seven, (titled to reflect the band's personnel additions), hopefully things will begin to change and the respect the band is earning will stick this time.

Led by the cleverly crafted "Born of Frustration," Seven is full of both lyrical and musical gems. "Ring the Bells," with its repeated lyric, "Got to keep awake to what is happening/ I can't see a thing through my ambition/ I no longer feel my God is watching over me/ Got to tell the world we've all been dreaming/ This is not the end, a new beginning.," as set to ironically upbeat music is one such example. And surprisingly, according to lead singer Tim Booth, "James is much better live [than on the album]. And it should be that way, at the end of the day, if you think about it. On stage, you have more of a communication going on." And with James, communicating is a role most audiences eagerly accept. [They played a blistering version of "Gold Mother" at the Paradise last Spring. -Ed.]

The Soup Dragons - Jim McCulloch Paul Quinn, Sean Dickson and Sushil Dade

Of course with all the talking, singing, dancing and general frivolity that goes along with the concert come two important ground rules that Sean Dickson has carefully laid out. First, everyone has to dance to the DJ that will spin between bands (it's a trend Dickson borrowed from Europe that has been catching on Stateside everywhere except in the Midwest). And the second rule, even though it's Halloween, sorry, no costumes. ❑

ARTS PREVIEW: DANCE UMBRELLA AND THE CANTATA SINGERS

David Hoosg Music Director of the Cantata Singrrs

BY PETER CATALANO

Two of Boston's premier dance and music companies have performance dates lined up in the next ten days. Dance Unbrella, arguably the country's foremost producers, introduces Seattle's Pat Graney Company from October 29th to the 31st at the Emerson Majestic Theatre. Graney's company of seven women are known both for their athletic energy and high impact statements on women's issues.

Go see this performance. Your life will be changed. Critics describe Graney's new piece Faith as "The kind of work reputations for genius are built," its images of women derived from Caravaggio, Michelangelo and (sic!) contemporary women's fashions.

Meanwhile the top-flight Cantata Singers and conductor David Hoose present Handel's great oratorio Israel in Egypt. Next to Messiah, Israel has some of Handel's best choruses (especially searing are the choruses of the seven plagues issued upon the Pharoah).

If you want to hear the Handel before the concert, check out the CD's led by the searching, charismatic John Eliot Gardiner (Erato label) or Andrew Parrot's version on Angel. I prefer the Parrot for its better soloists and the way he lets things flow with dignity; Gardner tries to milk the drama too much and winds up sounding a bit campy.

Tickets to The Pat Graney Company range from $10-$18 and can be had at TicketPro (931-3100), Out-of-Town Tickets or Bostix.

Tickets for Israel in Egypt range from $8-$30 and can be purchased by calling the Cantata Singers at 267-6502. ❑

Album Reviews

Red Hot Chili Peppers "What Hits!?" EMI

The Chilis have had a long and arduous trek in the music world with a lot of pitfalls and detours along the way. Losing such pivotal members as Hillel Slovak, Jack Irons (now in Eleven) and, more recently, John Frusciante, among other line-up changes, they've weathered the Eighties and became mega-platinum stars in the Nineties. Collected on an a-chronological greatest (sort of) hits, the older material shows their mercurial ascent to the radio-friendly domain of Top 40. Far more creative and fulfilling than "Give It Away" and "Under the Bridge" (the former not included and the latter unfortunately present), amazing songs like "True Men Don't Kill Coyotes" and "Jungle Man" really display the meat behind the tube socks. Whether they spewed out the funk like in the George Clinton-produced "Catholic School Girls Rule" or dibbied up the punk fervor in "Fight Like a Brave", they never lost the creativity that bands like Faith No More and Freaky Fukin' Weirdos try to emulate but rarely fully grasp. An excellent reminder for those who grew up with the Chilis and a quick knee to the groin for those who think "Under the Bridge" is a the ultimate song in alternative music. MTV, that means you.

Billy Goat "Bush Roaming Mammals" Third Rail/Hollywood Records

Produced by Jerry Harrison of the Talking Heads, Bush Roaming Mammals is Billy Goat's barrage of funk, fury and unabandoned innuendo. From the harsh funk/rap sounds of "Fuck More, Bitch Less" to the alternative layers of "Dog's Heroine" the album exploits the talents of rapper/percussionist Mike Dillon, drummer Earl Harvin, and guitarist Kenny Withrow (formerly of Edie Brickell and New Bohemians) to create ever varying textures and rhythms that make unacceptable sounds easily accessible.

Throughout Bush Roaming Animals, melodies are toyed with, exploited and occasionally discarded as the powerhouse rhythm section takes over. Lyrics sometimes full of wit like, "What could be more viral than/ Creating my own vibration/ Not an archangel/ Feeding on past sensation," from "Parent's Song," and totally devoid of intelligence like, "Pick my nose/ In a frat boy's face/ Fart on my hands/ Smell the taste," from "Trash Can Charlie," appear in almost equal quantities as Billy Goat rides the fine line between expression and perversion. It's a bizarre combination that deserves the exploration, dancing and listening that it's receiving.

R.E.M. "Automatic For the People" Warner Brothers

R.E.M. never fail to excite and enchant, be it the youthful exuberance of Murmur, the political edge of Life's Rich Pageant or the grandiose pop aura of Out of Time. Acoustically neo-folk with an occasional deadly dose of James Taylor-esque vocal stylings, Automatic for the People follows Out of Time's darker path which the band attempted to travel with "Low" but found Kate Pierson too freaky to bring along for the ride. Death, suicide and Elvis fall subject to Stipe's oftimes surrealistic mutterings. In the 'vein' of Dr. Kevorkian's death machine, the surging "Try Not to Breathe" explores the dark impulses of the other end of the freedom of choice. But instead of soapbox preaching, Stipe brings the issue to a personal level that transcends mere politics. The fascinatingly oblique "Sidewinder Sleeps Tonite" offers a Hicksville-view of living out in the boonies without an answering machine, yearning for something more substantial than soup, like "a candy bar/ a falling star/ or a reading from Dr. Seuss." But the string of pearls in this release is the eloquent and uplifting "Nightswimming" where Stipe goes skinnydipping, liberating not only his body and mind, but also the harmony within. Baring his soul to the light of the moon, that unmistakable Stipe mumble still obscures his lyrics at times but what can be understood is like the words of a beat poet, profoundly quirky but deeply moving in a absurd sense.

Shelleyan Orphan "Humroot" Columbia

With its belated follow-up to 1989's stunning Century Flower which garnered the band an opening spot on the Cure's Disintegration tour, Shelleyan Orphan has become more introspective than ever. The new album, titled Humroot after singer/guitarist Jemaur Tayle's boyhood dog, features songs that dig deep into the emotional workings of Tayle and especially co-singer Caroline Crawley. Backed by an unusual set of musicians that includes drummer Boris Williams of the Cure (who incidentally is Crawley's boyfriend), a hurdy-gurdy player and a slew of orchestral players, the extended band creates a sound on Humroot that entrances and captures the listener.

Songs like the current upbeat single "Burst" and "Muddied-Up" weave tender melodies around the hurdy-gurdy's pulse resulting in an odd sound that comes wonderfully close to typecasting the band as artsy wimps. Lyrically, the band focuses on personal experience and struggles with Crawley relating a recently discovered childhood trauma in an ad lib at the end of "Burst," and Tayle singing about a lost relationship in "Big Sun." Both Orphans (in a show against wimphood?) also have haunting songs about sex on the album. Crawley's is "Little Death" which describes a romantic but solitary bathtub scene and Tayle's is "Supernature On A Superhighway," which was written at the request of his girlfriend after the couple resolved a falling-out. Both songs carefully skirt the obvious in a way that only makes them more seductive. It's a formula for seduction and grace that defines Shelleyan Orphan and helps makes Humroot the event that it is.

Peter Gabriel "Us" Geffen

With Us, Peter Gabriel may have released the best album of his career. The songs are mature, challenging and continue to incorporate sounds not found on any other Western musician's work.

After a six year hiatus from this type of material, Gabriel's new songs have themes of longing for intimacy. On several tracks, he sings of returning home or wishing to be with a loved one. He sounds vulnerable and alone on "Loved to Be Loved" ("I cry the way babies cry/ The way they can't deny what they feel/ In this emptiness and fear/ I want to be wanted"). On other tracks, he lightens the mood. "Steam" is this year's "Sledgehammer," and one of the album's best tracks, "Kiss the Frog," finds Gabriel wailing away on harmonica with a guitar riff and a tight upbeat groove in the background.

The album opens with a stunning duet with Sineád O'Connor, with percussion by the Babacar Faye drummers. The percussion stands out through the length of the album, blending the technology of electronic drums with talking and hand drums.

Gabriel's voice can be gruff at times but it is always expressive. His textured singing contrasts well with the distinct Eastern influences on the seven minute "Secret World" and the inspirational "Fourteen Black Paintings."

Us also represents a major triumph for the production team of Daniel Lanois and Brian Eno (Achtung Baby) who will apparently be associated with every great album of decade.

-David Fenigsohn

AC/DC "Live" Atco

AC/DC - alternating current, direct current - the flow of electric charge. Damn right. Their new double album reveals AC/DC's circuit blowing best, with all their best tunes recorded live. Most of the superfluous audience noise discharge is eliminated in favor of first-hand musical attention. We already know AC/DC are rock legends and the crowd probably screamed for ten hours before letting them play live, so we don't need to hear it. No time is wasted in getting to the crystal clear sound of AC/DC.

The bass drum clicks, sounds of thunder rumble, people scream and Angus Young's "Thunderstruck" guitar solo/intro blares in the album commencement. They roll into the mega-hit "You Shook Me," the classic "Back in Black," the deadly "Dirty Deeds," melodic "Moneytalks" and the power riffin' "Rosie," amongst eighteen other tracks.

Gremlin vocals, flawless rock/blues guitar and rhythmic drum-pounding are showcased, and the live sound takes AC/DC's stalwart power-punch up a level. From the fifteen-minute "Jailbreak" craziness to the anthem "For Those About to Rock" finish, Live never lets up with 99% driven AC/DC. A single album is also available, containing their greatest hits for the less diehard listener, because there's never been a soul who didn't like an AC/DC song.

The "Last Call" Lady

A Good Call at Clarke's

BY LAUREN DARE

For anyone who works downtown, Clarke's is a familiar destination. Weeknights, beginning around 5:30, one finds one's self surrounded by a bevy of blue-suited guys who think "sales" is their middle name. Oh yes, those cold-calling employees of corporate Boston. On weekends, the crowd is more casual, but you have to submit to the degradation of waiting in line (if you arrive any time after 9:30PM) only to discover, upon finally achieving the interior, that Clarke's (pronounced "Claaahke's" by the natives) is really just a - gasp! - bar.

What makes this place tick? Why would one want to stand outside exposed to the elements for the opportunity to gain entrance? To solve this mystery and end my sleepless nights puzzling over this very question, I headed down to Clarke's to check out last call.

The interior of this establishment is dominated by the big, four-sided bar in the center of the main room. Several TVs provide background entertainment, along with the CD jukebox which belts out its pretty extensive popular selections. Hanging glass Tiffany lamps illuminate the dark wood paneling and give the place that old Bostonian feel, and make the clientele look softer and prettier than they probably really are. I quickly secured myself a barstool (no mean feat) and began to sip on a $3.00 bottle of Bud. Finding this not quite sufficient to get myself into the swing of things, I ordered one of their special 16 oz. Frozen Mudslides ($5.75) which was like an alcoholic milkshake, and settled back to scope the scene.

The first thing I noticed (of course) was that Clarke's had about 100 members of the male species in there and maybe, oh, six women. These are definitely my kind of numbers. There were the prerequisite suits, clustered together in little groups, laughing much too loudly at silly corporate jokes about over-the-counter stocks, and professing their love for me as I passed them on my way to the Ladies Room. Indeed. There were a couple of groups of ex-college football players whose necks were bigger than my waist, and who just couldn't seem to get themselves out of that huddle formation. They stood close together without exchanging a whole lot of conversation, all the while displaying limited social skills - definitely not enough to pique my interest. And then, there was everybody else.

Given its proximity to Faneuil Hall, tourist trap non pareil, Clarke's attracts surprisingly few out-of-towners, which is good because in my opinion (gross generalization coming up), tourists, especially in Faneuil Hall, are usually drinking too much, carrying on about the bars back in whatever Mid-Western corn patch they happened to crawl out of, and not good-looking enough to justify doing either of those two things in my presence.

The bulk of the crowd at Clarke's was made up of your average clean-cut American males, mid-twenties to mid-thirties, out to have a few drinks and a good time, and maybe meet some babes. In this crowd, I found quite enough to keep my eyes and imagination active, what with the ratio and all, but some guys must have had a disappointing evening since: A) they couldn't get me, and B) they couldn't get any of the other six women who were also there. Oh well, let's just hope that in their state of grief, these desperate dudes didn't try to wash away their sorrows with one of those Italian sausages some guy was selling across the street. After my Mudslide, I decided it would be prudent to make my way to the bathrooms. To get there, one has to navigate through the crowd, through the kitchen, down some stairs, and then stand in line. This, as we all know, can be one definition of hell, but I used my time in line to meet two very charming and good-looking guys who were waiting for the men's room. The hallway is so small, that if there were a lot of people waiting, the word intimacy would take on new dimensions. I never realized standing in line could be so entertaining, and this was just the beginning of the fun, as they were waiting for me when I got out of the Ladies' Room (which, by the way, had condoms, breath mints and hair spray - three items which allow you to prepare for almost any imaginable eventuality). So, I was able to greet the Last-Call (1:30 AM) with two very promising companions (no, I won't tell you what happened) and left Clarke's with, if not exactly sparks, at least a warm glow. Is it worth checking out? Absolutely. Is it worth standing outside for half an hour? Probably. Did I have a good time? Yeah, but you know me; I can make any Last-Call a good call.❑

Breaking the Barrier

"Steppin' Out" Unifies Culture and Music

BY S. G. PROVIZER

Boston tends to be a pretty fragmented city, its different racial and ethnic groups keeping pretty much to themselves. Steppin' Out is that rarity, an event that brings the city's cultural groups together.

Scheduled for Saturday, October 31 at the World Trade Center, this will mark the fifth time around for Steppin' Out, a musical benefit for the Dimock Community Health Center in Roxbury. Organizers divide the large World Trade Center space into separate nightclubs in order to recreate the Boston Jazz scene of yore. Listeners can wander between The Hi-Hat, The Jazz Workshop, The Savoy and other clubs, while grazing on an international buffet. WGBH will be around to record the proceedings for future broadcast.

This year's featured act, among many others that will perform throughout the day, is the Stanley Turrentine Quartet. Also appearing will be El Eco, The Heavy Metal Horns, Frank Wilkins, the Cecilia Smith Quartet and a half dozen other groups.

The Dimock Health Center grew out of a hospital that was founded in 1863, from which the first African American Nurse graduated in 1879. It now serves about 20,000 children and adults every year, most of whom are minority and low-income.

About 2,000 people are expected to attend this year's edition of Steppin' Out, which is sponsored in large part by the Bank of Boston. If you decide to put in an appearance, be forewarned that most of those attending will not be dressing down. More information is available by calling (617) 442-8800. ❑

•ALLSTON SPORTS DEPOT 783-2300, 353 Cambridge St., Allston. With 2 satellite dishes and over 20 TV sets, this may be the best place to catch a game outside of Fenway or the Garden. No cover and no dress code. Just a plethora of sports fans chatting- and arguing about, what else, sports - over beers, appetizers and killer burgers. .

•ARBUCKLES 782-9508, 1249 Comm. Ave, Brighton. Situated between BU and BC, Arbuckles attracts an even mix of students from both schools and anyone else in search of good food and drink at a good price. 20 oz. drafts for $2!!! The dress is always casual but the atmosphere ranges from mellow and relaxing to noisy and boisterous

•AVALON 262-2424, 15 Lansdowne St., Bos Boogie to Hip Hop, Funk, House, Progressive and Top 40 music at this colossal dance club. Music varies nightly. Take advantage of the enormous dance floor, placid lounge, and intimate booths. Avalon also boasts having the best light show in town. The crowd here is a good mix; anyone in the mood for dancing should feel comfortable. Cover charge varies. Dressy slacks, collared shirts, and dark dress shoes required. Great place to see live shows. Sun. night is gay night

•AVENUE C 423-3832, 5 Boylston Pl., Bos A chichi dance club located in the Theatre District across from the Common. Inside you'll find a mix of young professionals who arrive to meet, mix, mate, or just dance up a storm. Cover charge increases after 10 pm, so arrive early. No jeans or collarless shirts. Progressive music Fri. & Sat. nights

•BILL'S BAR 421-9678, Lansdowne St., Boston. Located in the midst of Lansdowne St., Bill's can be a great alternative to the dance clubs. It caters to a crowd consisting anywhere from punk to preppie. Bill's reputedly has the best jukebox in the city, programed by Peter Wolf. It's loud, clean and showcases live music occasionally. Casual and very relaxed

•BLACK GOOSE 617-720-4500, 21 Beacon St., Boston. A relaxed jazz club situated a stones throw from the Statehouse. Sit back and enjoy superb live jazz at its best. It's casual, unassuming and you don't have to wear an I love jazz attitude on your sleeve. No cover. Live piano music Monday through Friday from 5-7.

•BLACK ROSE 742-2286, 160 State St., Bos Live, traditional Irish music 7 days and an atmosphere that thrives on patron participation characterize this Faneuil Hall bar whose name is a symbol of Irish Catholic repression by the British. The food is home spun and the beer, well. . Irish. The upbeat crowd is composed of students, professionals, locals etc. and they all get involved in the show. Beware, people will know your status by stealing a glance at your claddagh ring! Moderate cover weekends. Casual dress.

•BOSTON BEACH CLUB 227-9664, 300 Faneuil Hall Mktpl., Bos A strong seaside theme prevails. Surfboard tables, plastic sharks, tropical drinks and a guy next to you wearing a Hawaiian shirt adorned with a few dozen neon leis. Live entertainment entertainment nightly from Rock to Reggae and Blues.. There is a small dance floor for those who like to bop.

•BULL & FINCH PUB (CHEERS) 227-8665, 84 Beacon St., Bos A recent study confirmed what many Bostonians have assumed for years, The Bull & Finch actually attracts more tourists than most of the sights on the Freedom trail! The TV show Cheers uses the doorway of the Bull & Finch for their opening shot, but nothing else. Still, it offers a comfortable and boisterous neighborhood atmosphere. Try it at least once. No cover. Casual dress

•BUNRATTY'S 254-9804, 186 Harvard Ave., Allston. A rock club favorite featuring top local talent nightly. The atmosphere is dark and smoky, but once the music starts jamming the place comes alive. Moderate cover varies depending on the act(s). No dress code

•CLARKE'S 227-7800, 21 Merchant's Row, Bos Located just outside of Faneuil Hall, this is a popular meeting place for Boston singles and college students. Clarke's has that old-fashioned saloon appeal that makes it easier to let your guard down. Expect a line on weekends. No cover. Casual dress. Full menu in the restaurant.

•COMMONWEALTH BREWING COMPANY 523-8383, 138 Portland St., Bos "Let no man thirst for lack of real ale" is the motto at this microbrewery and restaurant featuring glass walls so thirsty patrons can longingly observe the brewing process. The decor consists of copper tables, pipes and beer tanks. Approximately 10 English ales are served on tap as well as "Boston Burton Ale" served frosty cold in the bottle. Close proximity to the Boston Garden translates to before and after game crowds. Live Reggae and Calypso every Friday and Saturday Nite 9:30 to 1:00. Brewery tours are free, but sorry, this isn't the Molson factory. No samples. $3 Cover. Have dinner here and no cover

•COTTONWOOD CAFE 661-7440, 1815 Mass. Ave., Bos Open daily for lunch and dinner, this casual yet upscale cafe makes you feel like you've landed in the heart of Arizona. The southwestern cuisine (try the grilled specials) is complemented by the adobe booths and multitude of cacti. Relax in the outdoor cafe during the hot summer months

•CROSSROADS 262-7371, 495 Beacon Street, Boston. Hailed as one of the last neighborhood pubs in Back Bay, this casual hotspot is frequented by locals, students and young professionals. Among its many attractions are three dart boards, cable sports, a loud jukebox and Guiness on tap. Open 7 days a week 'til 2

•DAISY BUCHANAN'S 247-8516, 242 Newbury St., Bos This Newbury St. late night hot spot packs up consistently with singles on the make. A dark and noisy place, where at least one anonymous source has protested the lack of condom dispensers at the bar. More action as the night wears on, this is a great place to be for last call. No cover. Casual dress

•FROGG LANE BAR & GRILL 720-0610, 245 Faneuil Hall Mktpl., Bos At this large Faneuil Hall patio bar, the crowd is a mix of tourists and locals. Lofted above the crowd in Faneuil Hall, Frogg Lane offers a mixed menu of American and Mexican fare. No cover or dress code. Jukebox for indoor entertainment

•GREEN BRIAR 789-4100, 304-306 Washington St., Brighton. This neighborhood Irish pub in the heart of Washington Square has the best combination of the Celtic feel far from the parking mess of Government Center. Entertainment ranges from Irish music to the occasional progressive band. The crowd is a healthy mix of neighborhood folk and recent college graduates. Modest cover on weekends. Casual dress.

•HARD ROCK CAFE 424-7625, 131 Clarendon St., Bos Sure it's trendy and sure it's touristy, but where else can you watch people ooh-ing and aah-ing at a shrine devoted to Prince. Save any important and serious conversation for the ride home because, chances are, you won't be able to hear each other over the loud music anyway.

•HARPER'S FERRY 254-9743, 158 Brighton Ave., Allston. Perhaps Boston's best known R & B bar, Harpers offers live music nightly. Most of the bands are top local blues acts, but on Sun. the amateurs take over with open-mike night. Smoky but lots of fun with darts and billiards and a large dance floor. Moderate cover varies depending on the act. Collared shirts are required.

•LENOX PUB & GRILLE 536-5300, 710 Boylston St., Bos Enjoy casual dining and an extensive array of imported and domestic beers in an authentic British pub. Attracts an older, quieter crowd. No cover. Neat dress. Sun. brunch 11:30am-2:30pm.

•LILY'S 720-5580, 101 S. Market Faneuil Hall Mktpl., Bos The tourists have found a good deal at this cafe/piano bar where one can sample quality cheap eats and listen to piano Fri.-Sat. nights. No cover or dress code

•THE LITTLEST BAR 523-9766, 47 Province, Boston. Located near Downtown Crossing. A quick walk from the Orpheum Theatre, As its name implies, The Littlest Bar is quite little. In fact, the place only seats 17 people. Guinness and Rolling Rock are among the beers served on tap. Edibles also served. Hours are from 8:30am-12am Weekdays and Saturdays.

•LUCKY JOHNNY'S 731-6753, 1098 Comm. Ave., Boston. Classic Rock rhythms fill the air at this upbeat college bar frequented mostly by BU, BC and Pine Manor students. On weekends, it gets pretty crowded. So beat the lines and get there early. The barback grill is always open and the smaller underground lounge is a nice place to chat. Dress is a relaxed casual to somewhat dressy. Best of all, there's never a cover.

•MARKETPLACE CAFE 227-9660, 300 Faneuil Hall Mkt., Boston. in a comfortable, relaxed area in Faneuil Hall, sit back and listen to the great sounds of the Brian Walkley Band with special guest Bruce Bartlett every Wednesday at 8:00pm. Casual atmosphere and dress.

•NIGHTSTAGE 497-8200, 823 Main St., Camb An intimate, well laid-out club with a seating capacity of just 250. National and well known local acts. Blues, Rock, Zydeco, Jazz, Folk and Country are propelled by a sound system that will blast you comfortably to the outer limits of space and back. One of Boston's best up-close-and-personal clubs. Casual dress. Call Ticketron 931-2000 for ticket info.

•PARADISE ROCK CLUB 254-2052, 967 Comm. Ave., Bos One of Boston's best live clubs. Inside, you'll find one of the last of the small stages which still attracts national and international acts. Cover varies from moderate to heavy. Dress is casual. Dancing on non-band nights. For show tickets, call Ticketmaster at 931-2000 Minimum age varies by show. .

•PERRY'S 367-1297, 199 State St., Boston. Upstairs young professionals follow their favorite teams on six TV screens. While downstairs, college students and young professionals dance the night away Wed.-Sat. Located in the Faneuil Hall area, the dress is casual and the popcorn is excellent! Lunch and dinner served 11:30am-11pm.

•PURPLE SHAMROCK 227-2060, 1 Union St., Bos An irish bar with a touch of Faneuil Hall Entertainment alternates between traditional irish music and DJ dance music. Giant-screen TV. Moderate cover varies. Casual dress. Full menu.

•RATHSKELLER 536-2750, 526 Comm. Ave., Kenmore Sq., Bos Affectionately known as the Rat, this is a rock club with staying power. Past headliners have included the Police, 10,000 Maniacs and R.E.M. The Rat attracts a hardcore alternative crowd - lots of black clothes and biker jackets. No cover upstairs. Varies downstairs. No dress code. .

• RED HAT 523-2175, 9 Bowdoin St., Bos You'll feel just like you're in a London pub. Dark and casual atmosphere. Attracts young professionals and Beacon Hill residents. No cover. Casual dress. One of the few places you can still get pitchers of mixed drinks

•RYLE'S JAZZ CLUB 876-9330, 212 Hampshire St., Camb if you're a Jazz fan, don't miss Ryles. Downstairs you'll find an older crowd listening to traditional Jazz music. Upstairs is funkier with talented fusion musicians. Feel free to move between floors. Cover varies from moderate to heavy. Casual dress.

•SCULLERS LOUNGE 783-0811, 400 Soldiers Field Rd., Camb Renowned Jazz singers entertain here nightly. The bar is well stocked, the chairs are comfortable and the walls are paneled, evoking a mellow mood. The nighttime view of the Charles adds an air of romance. Heavy cover. Casual dress but no jeans or sneakers.

•T'S PUB 254-0807, 973 Comm. Ave., Boston. Great food, lively atmosphere and there's always something going on inside. Younger bar-hoppers beware: Only Valid ID's accepted (they're really tough!). Lunches and dinners are delicious and reasonably priced. College and thirtysomething crowd. Never a cover but always a good time

•THE BARMUDA TRIANGLE 437-1011, 200 Brookline Avenue, Boston. Located just outside of Kenmore Square, The Triangle features live music seven nights a week. Catch Boston's best Jazz early in the week, and kick up your heels to Latin, R&B, Reggae and Rock through the weekends. Full bar. Reasonable entertainment charge after 9:30. Weekly giveaways include free passes, round trip tickets to Bermuda, T-shirts, parties and more! .

•WALLY'S 424-1408, 427 Mass. Ave., Bos Treat yourself to unadulterated Jazz nightly at Wally's. Neatly tucked away on Mass. Ave. not far from Northeastern U., Wally's is easy to miss. The only indication that you've arrived is a small white beer sign out front. The atmosphere is dark, smoky and crowded and above all authentic. Mon. is Blues night. No cover. Casual dress. Arrive early to get a seat.

Men with overwhelming memories of a traumatic experience:
The Trauma Clinic at the Massachusetts General Hospital is studying an FDA approved medication which helps people who find it difficult to put traumatic events out of their minds. Eligible volunteers will be treated for 13 weeks, free of charge, with either a placebo or medication. If you are interested, please complete the following checklist:
- ❑ I have nightmares about and flashbacks to the events
- ❑ I have a difficult time putting the events out of my mind
- ❑ I am often irritable and I startle very easily
- ❑ I am afraid much of the time
- ❑ I do not get pleasure out of the things I used to enjoy
- ❑ I feel distant and cut off from others
- ❑ I have trouble with anger

If you have checked three or more, please call the Trauma Clinic at:
617-727-5500 ext 946 (And ask for Mike.)

Jazzy Ginger From Belmont

Rancatore - in case you've appreciated Toscanini's ice cream store in Cambridge - is the the Belmont schism, conceived and run by brother Joe. Or, if you've had enough of the freezer burn and frenetic familiarity of once-novel Ben & Jerry's flavors, here's where to turn for truly creamy ice cream. This is in a large, friendly drop-in and hang-out setting, where, as in a men's club, newspapers are provided including, discerningly enough, this one. There's a chatty bulletin board, too, and sports on the tube. As this product becomes more standardized, the old-fashioned taste of ice cream like this that billows with butterfat (14%) and lardless purity seems precious. And then there are the endlessly proliferating flavors, with about 60 in rotation, some of which are born from the accidental juxtaposition of flavors that turn out to make serendipitous bedfellows. Cinnamon-Banana came from such a crash, the Lemon-Walnut was borrowed from a Pepperidge Farm cake of the same ilk, and the very dense Grape-Nut-Raisin is just breakfast with naughtier milk. Seasonally available are flavors like Kiwi and Pumpkin, as well as Sherbets. Chocolates, both light and dark, are on the perennial list. Then there's Amaretto, Pistachio and M & M , and ice-cream that incorporates Orange Mint Milano cookies, the Heath Bar concept gone tea-party. Really worth the drive is the flavor that's virtually ungettable elsewhere - Ginger which, against the whitest of vanilla ice creams, causes a delicious sting ringing in your mouth. Because it's served at Thai restaurants as a palate-cleanser, it seems the most virtuous of desserts. Rancatore also serves real New York Egg Cream, and some frozen yogurts.

Single Deerlike Dog

"Bright, accommodating, funny, loyal, sweet." No, not a personal ad for the ideal human mate, but yes, words used by Louise Coleman of Greyhound Friends, to describe the thin-as-a dime dog beauties she saves from the horrible fate that usually follows their retirement from the racetrack. Given their career behavior of liquid leaping, they are surprisingly suited to domestic life. Whether curled up in a tiny circle on a chair, or stretched out like a relaxed cat on a sofa, they do not seem impossibly aristocratic, though historically they were king and queen adornments (King John traveled with a pack of 240 greyhounds, and Queen Victoria had one who slept on a palace bed). They do like a chance to exercise broadly, though, and if possible, leashlessly, though you don't need to live on an estate to have one. Nor does their vocational athleticism mean they are of a nervous shivering disposition at home. They could actually be seen as thinly-pared couch potatoes. Louise Coleman, who has several of her own, even says they are "pretty lazy." And they're just plain pretty, in shades of gray, white, black, "blue," fawn and brindle - or copper with marbling. A possible adoptee can be cat-tested, and about 65% of them are feline-compatible. Coleman's efforts are large and heroic; saving the dogs, fundraising, and also fomenting fun and ongoing support among greyhound "parents" who become a real affiliation group. So it's amazing she only asks as a donation for some part of the $150 that it costs to save and board a dog to the point of adoption - a dog that may have been valued at $1,000 as a gambling-object puppy. Be generous, please.

The Brothers Grimm (and Cynical)

See, there's stuff in fairy tales that kids don't get to know about - the bad endings, the infighting between the famous characters that tromp through the pages of storybooks, the immoral of the story behind the official one. Highly hip, (and just barely written for innocent children) are the books of Jon Scieszka (illustrated by Lane Smith): The True Story of The 3 Little Pigs! (a schticky apologia for the actions of the alleged Big Bad Wolf, known here simply as A. Wolf - he was framed actually), The Frog Prince Continued, (this one illustrated by Steve Johnson), the Stinky Cheese Man and other Fairly Stupid Tales. The land of happily ever after, now that the princess has kissed the frog into a state of royalty, proves to be domestic tedium with a lot of blaming and complaining that sends the Prince off on a quest to turn back into a frog. Instead, he becomes a frog-shaped carriage, and then, abruptly, the brilliant solution to their differences is found: they both become frogs. The Stinky Cheese Man, that might have been written in front of MTV at 3 a.m., takes famous tales to their ad-absurdam, not so magical conclusion. For instance, the Ugly Duckling simply grows up to be (hold the swan) "a really ugly duck." Meanwhile, a truly surreal exchange is going on above the narrative between the evil Giant and the naive blustering Little Red Hen who are each trying to grab airtime to tell their story. The giant comes crashing in to the hen's tale with a boot that squashes the word into small-type words reading "forget that hen." The book is full of midstream "The Ends" and ragtime beginnings, without consoling resolution. These "children's" books are really Mad Magazine-readiness primers.

AROUND TOWN

The Secret Garden comes to the Colonial Theatre November 3-22. If you go to this Tony Award-winning musical, you can see an excellent play and also help Boston's school children learn to love reading. In support of "Reading Is Fundamental," a nationwide literature program that helps children discover the joy and importance of reading, theatre patrons are asked to bring children's books in good condition through November 18. Boston's RIF program will then distribute the books throughout the schools. Tickets are $15-55 and are available at the box office, all Ticketmaster locations or by phone, 931-2787. For info on matinee and evening times, call 426-9366.

Choose your seat in one of the many very steeply set rows and then don't lean forward for the next 40 minutes. There's a good bet you'll get dizzy. Starting November 13, you'll be going far into the mountains of central Africa for the newest Mugar Omni Theater film at the Museum of Science to spend some time with the last great apes. Though the story does stress the mountain gorilla's dwindling numbers, threatened environment and the desperate efforts being made to protect these animals, the antics of these furry apes as they sleep and play softens the serious message and gives great entertainment. Purchasing tickets a day in advance is suggested. There are showtimes every day and most nights. Call 723-2500.

This is the week of auctions, and this particular one has a cocktail hour on top of a great cause. Where can you buy a flight on a B-24 bomber, a ride in the pace car at Lime Rock Race Track in Connecticut or tickets to Paris? No, not at the new Price Is Right. At the Museum of Transportation's 5th Annual Lifestyles and Wheels Benefit Auction. On Sunday, November 15 in Brookline, the events start at 1 pm when potential bidders may view the autos, including an MGB and Volvo, up for auction. From 3:30 pm to 4:45 pm, guests can place bids on silent auction items during a cocktail hour. At 5 pm, the real excitement begins. Price of participation is $10 in advance and $15 the day of the event. Proceeds benefit the museum's cultural and educational programs. For tickets and info, call 522-6547.

Candace Bergen, Harrison Ford, Geena Davis, Arnold Schwarzenegger, Michael Jordan, Alice Cooper?! In Boston?! No. But their coats are, and you could possibly buy one. An auction to benefit children's AIDS programs at Boston City Hospital, Project Overcoat takes place on Thursday, November 19. The festivities begin at 5:30 pm at Avalon and auction proceedings start at 7:30. Local celebs will model the auction items. In addition to celebrity coats, the auction will include specialty items like Frank Sinatra's red handkerchief, a menu from Monk's Cafe of Seinfeld show fame and much more. Call 524-3032 for details.

In the past three years, Crop Circles - or agriglyphs - have been forming in wheat and other crop fields at a rate of 500 each summer. These intricate designs, (some of which measure 1000ft., across), while appearing around the world for decades, have rapidly increased in number and are currently the topic of debate among some of the world's leading scientists and educators. On November 15, at 3 and 6:30 p.m., find out why this phenomenom has been proven to be a reality and NOT a hoax. Join George Wingfield, the Director of Field Research for The Center for Crop Circle Studies for a lecture and slide show at the Old Cambridge Baptist Church at 1151 Mass: Ave, in Harvard Square. Call 492-0415 for information. Advance tickets available at 7 Stars Book Store, 58 JFK Street (547-1317). Price: $10.

MAGIC FOR ADULTS ONLY

An Interview with Amazing Johnathan

BY KATHY MATHIESON

Mothers always try to teach their kids the safest way to use a sharp knife, but apparently a kid named Johnathan never listened.

So if, by chance, you are at Nick's Comedy Stop on Nov. 12, 13 or 14, and the guy on stage accidentally gouges his eye out, don't feel bad for him. He had it coming.

Magician/comic Amazing Johnathan, who would probably be given an NC-17 rating if he was on film, didn't really plan on a career as an entertainer. "I had no direction at all," he said. "I never gave any thought to what I would do. I just became a street performer by accident - I needed the money." Magic, something he started as a hobby, was what he knew best, so he set off in search of some loose change at San Francisco's lucrative tourist trap known as Fisherman's Wharf.

"I was only on the ground doing tricks for two or three people," Johnathan explained. "I needed to learn how to juggle chainsaws to make a crowd." Actually, chainsaws were a little too expensive to use as mere props, but the principle remained the same: "The money got better as the show got better," he said. In fact, he started getting so many people that he was arrested for creating an obstruction to traffic. He stopped performing on the streets in 1978, about the same time his bail money exceeded his income.

While developing his talents, Johnathan's influences were Steve Martin, Harry Anderson (known to most as Judge Stone on the TV show Night Court, Anderson could be found performing on the same sidewalks as Johnathan) and Penn & Teller. Today, his credits include appearing 23 times on Comic Strip Live and co-starring with John Candy in an HBO special. This Halloween, he performed a show at Bally's in Las Vegas called "Mayhem" with another magician/comedian named Kozak.

Now that he's hit the big time, will Amazing Johnathan ever reveal his secrets? "If the price is right," he said with a laugh. If you just want to pay the price of admission to learn about magic, sit on the extreme side of the stage, he advised. But even that is no guarantee. "I go pretty fast," he said. "It's pretty hard to catch me."

True, it may be hard to catch Amazing Johnathan, as he performs in a different city each week; however, you may soon be hearing about other performers like him as this new wave of comedy hits the clubs. "Any variety act is the new wave," Johnathan said. "Stand-ups have reached their peak; there isn't a lot left for people to talk about that hasn't been covered by another stand-up [comic]."

Although he does a variation of the rabbit-out-of-a-hat trick that will not be explained in this article, the 34-year-old performer does not do "any of the old-style magic," like linking rings together; rather, he goes for "shock effects." You may think you are unshockable, but you haven't seen Johnathan's "bloody props," as he calls them. Or, for that matter, Johnathan's blood. ❑

NEW ENGLAND SKIING: EAST TO WEST

BY ERIC PETERSON

Mother Nature has a sick sense of humor. That's why whenever a tornado touches down anywhere in the United States, a trailer park gets flattened, and that's why New England doesn't get 45 feet of champagne powder snow every winter. While skiers in the Rockies are hip-deep in new snow and wearing snorkels to breathe in it, New England skiers are having their fillings loosened while rattling across sheets of boilerplate ice. While Western areas get January blizzards dumping three feet at a shot, New England has the traditional pleasure of the January thaw, where whatever snow we have turns to the consistency of a Slurpee, then refreezes a week later into diamond hard ice.

But don't believe that skiing in New England is poor. We don't have lousy weather; we're "environmentally challenged." Besides, in the last ten years, Yankee ingenuity has gone a long way toward conquering the poor natural conditions that have cursed New England ski areas. Snowmaking has proven its value and has become an art. Man-made snow now covers more terrain in New England than ever before. In addition, areas are becoming more sensitive to environmental issues and are improving their snowmaking efficiency. This in turn has changed man-made snow from the near slush of fifteen years ago into near natural conditions today. Improved grooming has also allowed New England areas to maintain whatever snow they have, and to "customize" conability levels.

ALL OVER NEW ENGLAND, SKI AREAS ARE MAKING SNOW AND PLANNING EVENTS FOR THE ANNUAL INFLUX OF SNOWBUNNIES. CONDITIONS EVERYWHERE, INCLUDING SUNDAY RIVER (ABOVE) LOOK BETTER THAN IN THE PAST YEARS.

Sharon McNeil

Variable snow conditions notwithstanding, New England has some of the finest ski terrain in the country. Also, no place on Earth has as many ski areas so close to one another and so accessible to major cities and roads. Each area has a unique flavor; ask ten people for their favorite and you'll hear ten different answers. What follows is a sampling of some of New England's best, listed from East to West:

MAINE:

SUGARLOAF/USA

91 trails, 33% expert, 29% intermediate, 38% novice. 90% of terrain covered by snowmaking. Ticket prices: $34 midweek, $38 weekend.

What the hell is a sugarloaf anyway? And why name a mountain after it? And what's with the USA in the name? Is that so we don't confuse it with the ski areas in Sugarloaf, Egypt or Sugarloaf, China? These are troubling questions. There's nothing troubling about the skiing at Sugarloaf though. Sugarloaf has some of the best terrain in the East. While the mountain tends to lose the sun early and gets fairly windy, overall, the conditions are usually excellent. One thing that is really annoying, however, is those blue triangular Sugarloaf/USA stickers that you see everywhere these days. I even saw one stuck to a lamp post in Paris. Why anyone feels the need to advertise where stickers are rapidly becoming the ski crowd's annoying equivalent of "Baby on board" signs, or those stick-on Garfield dolls. Sugarloaf has added snowmaking this season on the Snowfields, the wide open area above the treeline, thus proving that they refuse to be outdone by Western bowl skiing. In addition, the overall snowmaking capacity has been increased this season to cover 90% of the terrain. I guess this means you'll really have to try to find a rock to ski over.

For snowboarders, a halfpipe will be built, and Sugarloaf will host a Pro Snowboarding race on February 27 and 28. This race will reportedly be one of only three sanctioned snowboard races in the country this year.

Gondola Line is recommended as the toughest trail on the mountain, with Narrow Gauge being the best for showoffs and for scoping the opposite sex. According to our sources, most of the ski instructors are single, so maybe it's worth taking a lesson or two. (Hey, it beats going on Studs.) Also, after January 3, college students with a valid I.D. will be able to get an all day lift ticket for just $25.

Off the slopes, Sugarloaf will be hosting a concert series every weekend though the winter. The series kicks off on November 14 with the J. Geils Band. In addition to the seven bars on the mountain, the base village has a total of 14 bars and restaurants.

Blues night at The Bag is reported to be a blast. And so that you will be able to sample the wares at all 14 establishments and not worry about driving, there is a free shuttle bus service that runs through the village. Should you be lucky enough to need one and condoms are for sale at numerous locations on the mountain.

SUNDAY RIVER

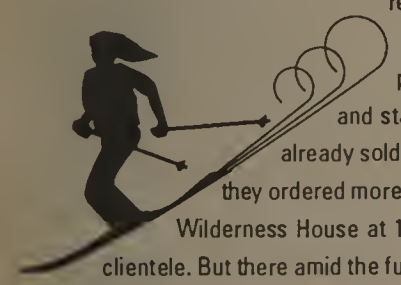
72 trails, 33% expert, 23% upper intermediate, 18% lower intermediate, 26 novice. 90% of terrain covered by snowmaking. Ticket prices: not yet released.

Ten years ago, I didn't know a single soul who skied at Sunday River. Now, it's one of the hottest areas in New England. On the one hand, this is great since it means more money for slopeside improvements. On the other, it leads to an unfortunate increase in the bonehead quotient as some young, bad skiers will arrive at the mountain with a beer in hand looking for Ft. Lauderdale on the slopes and wind up wrecking the skiing for everyone else. Luckily, Sunday River has managed to reap the benefits of its increased popularity while avoiding most of the pitfalls. They've been so successful in fact that while Sunday River was voted the

NEW ENGLAND SKIING: EAST TO WEST

HOW TO LOOK HOT...

BY AMY RUTH LEVINE



"Say no to day-glo," a phrase that has always been a mantra for snowboarders, has infiltrated the mainstream ski crowd. Neon is out, and magenta, hunter-green and brown are in.

"Earthtones," said Scotty Moises, a salesperson at Madd Mikes snowboard/windsurfer shop in the South End. He and a few of Boston's outdoor store representatives predict that the 1992-93 ski season's all-the-rage list will read like a Star-Trek-at-Monterey prop chart: the Grateful Dead, polypropylene, chili peppers, tri-setting bindings, batik and stocking caps. Outfitted to the hilt means low key and high-tech.

Ski Market's premiere downhill ski is the Olin Dark Star. Complete with the Grateful Dead logo at the ski tips, and trendy slogan "Lunatic Fringe," the nearly $500 sizzling commodity is branded with lightning bolts to prove it.

Keeping the boards down to earth is the Marker M1SC binding ($365). "It's the latest greatest thing in binding development," said Jennifer Fitzpatrick, a full-time staffer at Ski Market's 860 Commonwealth Avenue location. The binding tightens and flexes with a flick of a switch at the toe. Set it for soft, packed or hard snow and ice conditions. The idea is that the ski boot and the ski will sing down the mountain in perfect harmony with the terrain and release reliably upon hazard.

For a pair of ski boots to complement the mode, the reps say Salomon's Equipe 9 degree ($429) and the heated Lange X7 ($379) rank high. Developed a few years ago, heated boots still need an eight-hour electric charge before use. At the slopes, flick the heat switch for a blast of heat on the lift. The enhanced fit of the red and pink Equipe is designed to provide a snug fit for every foot.

When not being used to retrieve a fallen hat from under a ski lift or poke a friend in the derriere, ski poles play a key role in guidance and stability. And before this year's ski rush has kicked in, Ski Market has already sold out of the Goode ($80) super-light, super-thin ski poles. Don't worry; they ordered more.

Wilderness House at 1048 Commonwealth Avenue prides itself on a low-profile, high skill clientele. But there amid the functional mess kits, crampons and army green sleeping bags, raging ski style abounds.

"Cross Country skiers aren't fashion conscious and cool isn't important to them," said salesperson Rich Donnelly. But his keen knowledge of the fun and cool of cross country discounted his humble comments. He rattled off a long list of new innovations for the placid and strenuous work-out. Fischer, he said, makes the best ski and this year's Fibre Crown XT ($129) in its green, red, blue and chartreuse reflects the invasion of style on the plateau. "It's the best for both making your own trails and skiing those already made," Donnelly said. The Trak Sportive is a less expensive ($109) option.

The funky side-zip-closure of the black, green and purple Salomon 611 X-C boot ($130) reminds that skiing with flare is not confined to an incline. The New Nordic Norm ($130) has a metal bar at the toe that locks into the front of the X-C binding. This guides the boot onto a foot-length raised bar that fits into the boot's complementary groove.

A Nordic classic sport gaining popularity in the West is telemark skiing in which the toe attaches to the ski and the heel is free. "You ride the ragged edge of disaster a bit more than with X-C and Alpine," Donnelly said. The Fischer GTS ($285) is this year's gem, as is the more expensive Black Diamond Telemark Savage ($387). The skis sport the high-tech color schemes of sunset pink, purple and green or black and green.

The Merrill Ultra ($300) all leather black lace up boot looks less than trendy but its stiff ankle support provides the strength necessary to the safety of the telemark skier.

Telemark skiers may chose between the cable and the three pin bindings. The RIVA Black Diamond cable binding ($84) has firm control while the three-pin Rattefella ($26) is a more traditional attachment for X-C style telemarking.

Swix ($47) makes the telemark pole of choice and Exel ($12) is the pick for X-C. There is even an extending pole adjustable for changing ski conditions and inclines, longer for flat terrain and shorter for steep.

And the hottest new X-C spin-off? Skating - pushing along and skiing with the legs out to either side - as if on an ice rink. This sport is one of the most strenuous around. Polyproylene underwear, a fabric that keeps the wearer dry by wicking moisture from the skin to the outer layers of the clothing is a must.

Madd Mikes is the dark star of snowboard retailers. Tucked away at 54 Thayer Street, it has a national mail order business and personal retail line to boot. "Sixty percent of our sales are from the mid-west," said neon-averse Scotty Moises. He touts the Shawn Palmer signature team board by Sims ($549) named for one of the most talented snowboarders in the world. With a pimp emblazoned on the red, white and blue board, "It's ugly but it's hot," he said.

Snowboarders seem to be preparing for the day when standing on the moon is the norm. "The boots are kind of like moon boots but stiffer," Moises said. The Airwalk (ranging from $139 to $199) is his unhesitating recommendation.

And to attach the boot to the ski, a zillion-time-a-day ritual as the boot needs to detach and re-attach for riding the ski lift, there are the Trick soft and Alpine plate (for a hard boot) bindings, depending on the ride preferred.

With the sporting equipment functionally cutting-edge and decidedly cool, fashions and gadgets enhance the style and ease of putting them to the test. WAVE RAVE's shells top the list for snowboard jackets and knee and rear-padded pants. The skiers wear the shells too. Reminiscent of the loose style of a scarecrow, the earth toned snowboard garb is oversized and meant for comfort. Wilderness House sells the Northface Steep Tech jacket ($375). Designed by skier Scott Schmidt, it is outfitted for superior protection in extreme conditions. The Marmot Randonee (purple and gray, $365) complete with powder skirt, draw waist cord and mesh lining is made of Gore-Tex - fully waterproof, windproof, and breathable.

Earth tone fleece pull-overs layer well under the shells, holding the body's warmth in while keeping the wind and water out. The Wildnerness House has the Lowe Alpine micro-fleece top: the thickness of a number one area in the East for families according to the October 1992 SKI magazine reader's survey, it is also one of the most popular destinations for college students.

Sunday River is known for having excellent snow conditions even when other areas do not. The area has added a new high speed detachable quad and a new triple chair this year, increasing their uphill capacity to 24,000 skiers per hour. For those who don't know, the higher the uphill capacity, the shorter the liftlines, which means you spend less time standing in line with a guy named Vince who's up visiting from Jersey and wants to know where the best place is to meet chicks.

There has also been a 20% increase in snowmaking, which will allow the mountain to make more snow at a faster rate and the increased efficiency will allow them to do it cheaper. However, since ski areas work like the government (soaking in the money), don't expect to see the savings reflected in the cost of your lift ticket. Scheduled to open on December 22 is a new slopeside hotel. Constructed at a cost of $8 million, or just under what Ross Perot has in his checking account, The Summit Hotel has 148 rooms and is the largest of its kind in New England. In addition to a full health club, day care, conference facilities and an indoor/outdoor pool, the hotel will boast a gourmet restaurant and bar. The Summit is reportedly so close to the slopes that if a skier were to lose control on the run, he or she could crash land in the outdoor portion of the pool. Unfortunately, it doesn't have a swim-up bar for drop in skiers. The toughest runs on the mountain are said to be White Heat and Vortex, although Obsession, Airglow and Shockwave all received mention. (Is it just me or do all of these trails sound like new Calvin Klein perfumes?)

From January 4-7 and 11-14, Sunday River will be hosting the "Gotta Rock" promotion aimed at college students. During these two periods, students will be able to buy lift tickets for $25 a day and stay in the ski dorm at the mountain for $22 a night. Daytime events like a "Dash for Cash," which goes up a trail littered with money, will prove once again that greed always beats out dignity. Especially when you're in college.

At night, different bands will be playing at the mountain and your lift ticket will get you in for free. Presumably, everyone else pays a ridiculous cover.

NEW HAMPSHIRE

LOON MOUNTAIN

41 trails, 25% expert, 50% intermediate, 25% novice. 85% of terrain covered by snowmaking. Ticket prices: $38 weekend, $32 weekday.

Loon is probably the most accessible of all the big New England ski areas to Boston. This is its greatest advantage while also its greatest curse. The fact that it's only a two hour drive north of Boston on I-93 makes it convenient for daytrips or on short notice - like when you notice it's been snowing all night and have a sick day coming from work. On the other hand, it also tends to draw plenty of Camaro Cowboys, but while this hardly describes the typical Loon skier, there are more of them than you'd like.

The mountain itself has a fine selection of trails and is generally very well groomed. While the most advanced skiers will find little to truly test them, all other ability levels have plenty of terrain from which to choose.

Complaints about Camaro Cowboys aside, the crowds at Loon are pretty sedate. In fact, not a single person cheered from the lift when one skier fell in a major wipeout. Known as a "Yard Sale," his skis were in one place, while his poles, hat, goggles and one glove were scattered across the snow.

NEW ENGLAND SKIING: EAST TO WEST

The skier was fine but the crowd was a dud. The crash deserved an ovation.

Microchips come to the mountain as Loon offers a new way to pay for your skiing this year. Under the Loon Points system, skiers will buy a bar coded ticket containing a certain number of points. With each run a scanner will deduct a number of points from the skier's ticket. The number of points deducted depends on the length of the lift. Since the tickets are good for three years from the time of purchase, there is no pressure to "ski your money's worth." If the conditions are rotten, you can just head home. The system may be the wave of the future and Loon is catching the first swell.

DOWNHILL AT WATERVILLE VALLEY

WATERVILLE VALLEY

53 trails, 20% expert, 60% intermediate, 20% novice. 96% of terrain covered by snowmaking. Ticket prices: $39 Adult, $34 Teen (age 13-21), $24 Junior (under age 12). Other, discounted rates apply early and late season.

Described as "a resort at the end of the road," Waterville Valley is well removed from the hustle and hassles of the everyday world. Or depending on your perspective, there ain't much happening there. There is however, plenty of good skiing.

While the bulk of the terrain is intermediate, there are some runs to challenge even the best skiers. True Grit is a spectacular run, and is the best place on the mountain to show off. The area has added to its snowmaking capacity, and will be able to make 50% more snow on the upper half of the mountain this year. Snowboarders are welcome on every trail on the mountain except one, and a new larger half pipe is planned for this year.

If you've never skied before, Waterville has just the program for you. From November 28 through December 18, they will be running their Learn to Ski Free program. Just call ahead to the area and make a reservation in the program. You'll receive a free lesson, equipment rental and use of the beginner slopes. That way you won't have to worry about looking stupid in front of people who seem like they had skis on before their diapers were off, and they won't have to worry about accidentally squashing you when you cut them off on a trail.

In addition, Waterville will hold its first ever "College Bonus Weeks" this winter from cotton turtleneck. Costs range from $80–$180.

Angela Wooldridge

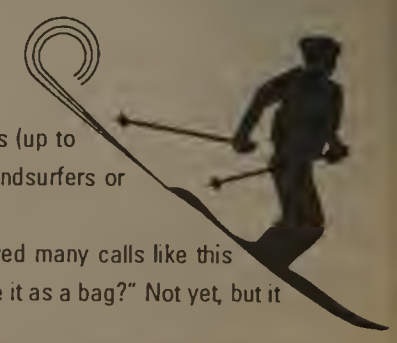
Bogner makes high fashion clothing ($650) for the slopes. "The best part is that you can really ski in it too," Fitzpatrick said.

The long john remains a must for the outward bound. Ski Market carries the Hot Chilly's (Pepperneck $49) form fitting to keep you warm and made of a wool/lycra/polypropylene blend. "Never again wonder how to extract underwear bulk from a bodily crevice without embarrassing yourself and others," reads the container labels.

The sock of choice for the freeze-dried toe set are the Dahlgreen dri-strides ($15). Silk, wool, and cotton span different areas of the foot. The toe is silk, in case you're wondering.



Hatwear varies from the classic wool baseball cap of the snow-boarder to the batik Sno Zone hat ($39) that looks like a cut-off pant leg that can be tied back or allowed to flop in the breeze. The African print stocking cap seems to be a hot commodity at Ski Market and the tasseled and ear-flapped Nordic wool hat maintains its appeal.

"Scarves are tacky for snow boarding," said Moises, "and they get in the way." But Ski Market has a wonderful alternative to the itchy scarf with silk on the outside and fleece on the inside. It fits like a bandanna ($35). Still popular are the super soft Turtle fleece neck wraps that pull over your head in newly designed earth tones ($10).

Snowboarders wear Gore-tex mittens with Kevlar palms, not gloves. (They're easier for the on-again off again ritual of clamping the boot to the snowboard). Skiers should look for the Grandoe glove that molds to the hand and has a zip-out liner.

Although many people in today's ski crowd would love to ski the mountains of the moon, sunlit terrain will have to suffice. As a result, there is a big market for sun glasses and goggles. Oakleys ($70-$130) are definitely the rage. They stay on your face and are shatter resistant - besides, they look mighty fine. Bolle's latest goggle comes with a nose guard ($120).

And finally, to complete the outfit at the pinnacle of style on the slopes, the ski gadgets. There's the Ski Carrier ($15.95), an innovative wheel that attaches to the end of the ski, making the instinctive ski-dragging by the tired skier or child a functional action. Cat Tracks ($12.95) protect boots from the damaging elements of ski center parking lots by clamping onto the bottom of the ski boot. Zooke ($5.95), one of many lens cleaners, is a sleekly packaged pot of blue or hot pink wax-like balm that prevents fogging and repels lint. One-time-use hand and toe warmers give off heat for 8 hours ($2). The Snow Eraser wipes snow and water away from glasses, smudge and scratch free ($3). And finally, there are ski bags for every size and combination of ski gear. Of course, everything comes in earth tones.

And to clamp it all on to the car - the Thule or Yakima roof racks (up to $200) receive glowing reviews and they convert to carry bikes, windsurfers or kayaks when the snow melts.

But while the leaves are still on the trees, Ski Market has received many calls like this one: "Do you have a hat that has ear flaps, a mask, and you can use it as a bag?" Not yet, but it must be out there somewhere.

A CROSS-COUNTRY SKIER TAKES ADVANTAGE OF THE NORDIC TRACKS IN FRONT OF MT. MANSFIELD IN STOWE, VERMONT.

January 3–8 and 10–15. During these weeks, a lift and lodging package will be available for $199. Included in the price are apres-ski activities like bonfires, broom ball, ice skating, plus whatever fun you can dream up. On that note, condoms are for sale throughout the area. No meals are provided so bring plenty of macaroni and cheese. Lodging will be at the Town Square Condominiums, right at the mountain.

One can only marvel at the logic of putting hundreds of college students in a single bloc of condos, but logic follows that it'll make it easier to contain the damage though. Expect the two hottest bars in town, The World Cup Bar and Grill and Legends to see plenty of action during these weeks.

VERMONT

92 trails, 20% expert, 57% intermediate, 23% novice. 60% of terrain covered by snowmaking. Ticket prices: $39 weekend, $34 midweek.

Once upon a time, ten or twelve years ago, Stratton was a funky little area with tons of charm, a small base lodge, really long lift lines and great skiing. How things change. Today, the base lodge has been swallowed by a faux alpine village that includes a 90 room hotel complex and a host of shops. It even has a clock tower. The effect is disorienting though, sort of like Disneyland meets Switzerland. On the plus side, the lift lines have largely disappeared thanks to Stratton's improved uphill capacity of 20,020 skiers per hour. Snowmaking has been expanded this year with 51 new snowguns, including some that will be mounted on lift towers to provide better coverage. A hidden benefit of these tower mounts is that skiers will be able to avoid having a cheap facial peel when skiing through the path of the guns. In addition, a new windscreen has been installed on the top 450 feet of the gondola. This will enable the gondola to continue to operate in winds of up to 75 miles per hour and will cut wind related closings by 50%. It's also expected to cut the use of airsickness bags by gondola passengers by almost 100%.

While the mountain offers primarily intermediate terrain, there are still some runs to challenge any skier. World Cup is one of the toughest runs on the mountain, and Bear Down and Freefall, two new trails in the Sun Bowl area, are expected to be equally difficult. Showoffs should head for Upper Standard under the gondola. Black Bear, a perennial intermediate favorite, has been widened this year to twice its original width.

In one of the best ideas since drop-seat longjohns, Stratton will be offering a frequent skier card. The card costs $25, but it entitles you to $17 off the price of an all day ticket until December 21 and after March 21. Between those dates, the card gets you $10 off per day, except on holidays. Once you've purchased ten tickets at this rate, your discount jumps up to $17 off on any additional tickets that you buy. When played right, this card brings the cost of skiing from the Ross Perot level back in line with real people's budgets.

The best nightlife is found at Mulligan's, where a Guiness served in a frosted 24 ounce mug can replace your evening meal, or at the base of the mountain at the Red Fox Inn where live music is on tap Wednesday nights.

enormous area on six mountains, there is some excellent skiing at Killington but unfortunately you have to travel a long way to get from one good area of the mountain to another. The different areas are often linked by long, boring cat tracks that are often swarming with fools trying to imitate Franz Klammer while doubled over in what they think is a tuck. Instead of looking like hot skiers, they look like they've been poisoned by a bad burrito from the Taco Shack.

Killington really is huge. You get a hint of just how big it is by the way they measure their skiable terrain. Most areas measure terrain in skiable acres of land. Killington uses mileage. As in 77 miles of skiable terrain. That's roughly like skiing from Boston to Providence. Downhill. However, the cat tracks are included in that figure.

The best skiing in Killington is at Bear Mountain and on Killington Peak. Outer Limits on Bear Mountain is a legitimate "expert only" run. In fact, Killington claims that the run is the steepest trail in the East. This year, a new area known as the "Canyon Area" will be open between Killington Peak and the Glades. A new quad lift has been added to service the area and snowmaking has been expanded to cover the new terrain.

Overall, snowmaking has been expanded by 35% for this season, allowing Killington to make more snow faster and cover more terrain. To keep the snow out of the woods and on the trails, eight new grooming vehicles have been added. This includes two new "Winch Cats" used to groom runs which are too steep for ordinary equipment.

Killington will be offering a college discount program this season. Available for full time college students between the ages of 18 and 24, the card costs $25. It then entitles the student to a special lift ticket price of $25 per day from Sunday through Friday. The card does not apply on Saturdays, so plan to do homework that day or go to a party.

The number of trails at Killington is almost matched by the number of bars and restaurants in the area. At latest count, there are 57 such establishments in the area of the mountain - 25 of which offer live entertainment and 11 that feature dancing. For those on a budget or a bender, Pepper's has $1 draft beers. Other popular choices are The Wobbly Barn for live music and The Nightspot for dancing and people watching.

of the MacVillages built at ski areas around the country aspire to reach. With its funky New England charm, clapboard houses and great skiing history, Stowe is a legendary ski area.

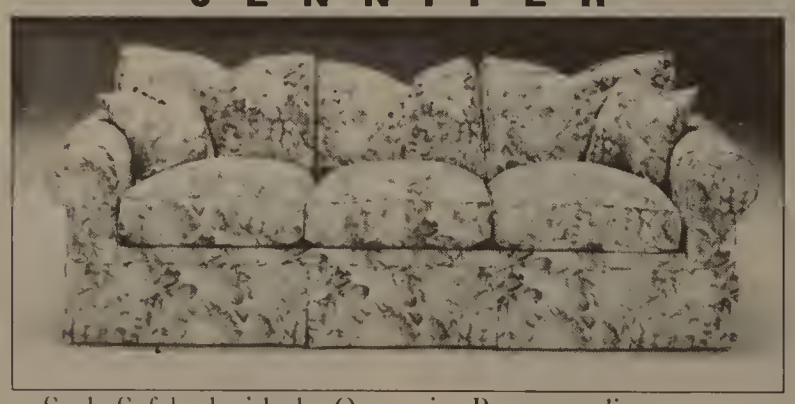
In spite of the loss of the old horse blankets that you used to get to keep warm on the chairlifts, Stowe has retained most of its old style appeal while moving smoothly into the present. This year alone, 3.2 million dollars in improvements have been added to the mountain. These include expansion of the snowmaking capacity, and the construction of The Mid-Way Cafe, a new on-mountain restaurant in the old gondola terminal. The base lodge has also been refurbished as part of the ongoing work at the mountain.

A new eight-passenger gondola was installed last year. Running top to bottom in under seven minutes, the gondola is reported to be the fastest in the world and has boosted Stowe's uphill capacity to 11,655 skiers per hour. The effect has been to cut down on what used to be long lines at the gondola loading station and move skiers across the mountain more effectively.

The best trails on the mountain are the legendary "Front Four": Goat, Starr, National and Liftline. National and Liftline both have snowmaking, but a trip down Goat when there hasn't been recent snow will be a lesson in rock crushing. Liftline - where it runs under the quad lift - is the best place to show off. Don't count on the locals being impressed however; they'll be off skiing in the woods through secret glades that they create and maintain themselves. Try to find the secret spots yourself, and you'll just get lost or wind up eating bark. And don't ask someone where they are, they'll just laugh at you. The best way to find them is to move to Stowe and become a local yourself.

Stowe has also added to its grooming capabilities and its guardians are so confident of their ability to provide good conditions (even during the January thaw apparently), that they will offer the Stowe Two-Day Guarantee. For once, a ski area is putting its money where its snow report is. The guaranty works like this: You buy a two-day lift ticket. Once you go out and ski, if you don't like the conditions, you may return your ticket before 8:50 a.m. and get your money back. Granted, 8:50 a.m. is not exactly late, but it still gives you plenty of time to gauge the conditions. Of course, if you snooze, you lose, and you're stuck with whatever conditions prevail.

While Stowe is a traditional favorite of the college crowd, it's also popular with families. A family promotion which is currently under way allows kids 12 years and under to ski and stay free in many area facilities. For skiers on a budget, there are two ski dorms in the area: the Vermont State Ski Dorm and the Round Hearth Ski Dorm. Both offer group rooms at reasonable rates, but if you plan on a romantic weekend with your lover, do your prospective roommates a favor and go to a hotel. Unless you're into that sort of thing, of course.



Stowe has a lively nightlife with numerous bars and restaurants to choose from. Two of the best are the Matterhorn, where "everybody goes," and The Rusty Nail. The Rusty Nail used to have a mechanical bull ride, but apparently the lawyers got to them and they took it out. Stay there late enough and you'll be glad they did.

Sunday River, Killington, Sugarloaf and Stratton ski areas have limited terrain open for skiing.

In a fitting role and a fine performance, Joe Pesci plays the squat and fast-talking '40s shutterbug Leon Bernstein, who unwittingly becomes involved in a plot involving international conspirators and the Mob. Director /writer Howard Franklin incorporates sensuous visual imagery into the film, with '40s-style lingo for dash. Barbara Hershey is Bernstein's love interest, a society gal and club owner who feels out of place among the well-to-do. Ultimately Hershey's performance in unmoving, but Pesci compensates and handles his first major lead role with steadiness and assurance. The plot resoluation may come a little quick for your left hemisphere, but your right one is sure to enjoy the aesthetics of the film.

Hero

"Irrepressibly Cute"

Stephen Frears' cynical comedy is irrepressibly cute and doesn't have the bite of his earlier films (The Grifters, Dangerous Liasons). But it's an illuminating glimpse at the way the press and public loosely conspire to thrust the illustrious epithet of the film's title onto whomever they choose. Dustin Hoffman plays Bernie LaPlante, a grubby, two-bit thief who, against his "professional" instincts, risks his life by anonymously rescuing several passengers trapped in a downed plane. One is a prize-winning television journalist (Geena Davis), who coincidentally is on the lookout for a story worthy of LaPlante's heroics. She and her colleagues search for the mysterious hero. A handsome and homeless veteran (Andy Garcia) steps forward as the much-sought-after risk taker, and LaPlante is sent to prison for trafficking in stolen goods, unable to claim his reward. Will the real hero be revealed?

Under Siege

"A Blank Slate"

Ruthless terrorists take over a battleship, and only one man can stop them. . . . Steven Seagal makes a solid attempt to join the A-list of Hollywood action heroes in this big-budget thriller, which plays lot like a horizontal Die Hard, only not as good. It is, however, Seagal's best movie to date, with enough violent deaths and explosions to keep things moving along, although the outcome is never in doubt. Movies of this type are really only as good as their bad guys, and Tommy Lee Jones and Gary Busey, two erstwhile Oscar nominees, are more than adequate for the task - they have enough bad skin and big teeth between them to equip three terrorists. Both overact a bit, but it's a refreshing contrast to the minimalist, shall we say approach to acting taken by Seagal, whose empty visage is not so much a stone face as a blank slate.

A.L.

"How To Kill A Thrill"

To regard Consenting Adults as a thriller is to severely strain the word. Kevin Kline and Mary Elizabeth Mastrantonio play a bored suburban couple who find the antidote for their tedium in the new next-door neighbors: Kevin Spacey, cultivated in the art of risk-taking, wins their friendship via a series of sly maneuvers, as his sensuous wife (Rebecca Miller) captures Kline's attention. Kline is lured into a sexual wife-swapping, ushering in the so-called suspense. A lethargic pace is sustained to the end, as we anxiously await the obligatory electrifying showdown that doesn't show up. The camera, addicted to the slow pan, moves as though it were caught in a traffic jam, and seldom are the pans punctuated with sharp cuts that result in the requisite frisson. The script, like the editing, is flavorless.

JENNIFER EIGHT

Eight is Not Enough

BY ANTHONY LEIBS

British writer/director Bruce Robinson, whose previous films were the quirky cult favorites Withnail and I and How To Get Ahead In Advertising, has apparently decided to go Hollywood in a major way with Jennifer Eight, which is about a serial killer who murders young blind women. This continues a somewhat dubious trend: talented, respected directors who produce blatantly commercial thrillers to up their viability in the marketplace. Scorsese did it last year with Cape Fear; Coppola is doing it this week with Dracula. This is not necessarily bad news - Jonathan Demme showed with Silence of The Lambs that a great director can work in all genres - but Robinson has produced an utterly conventional damsel-in-distress thriller.

The premise is intriguing: Los Angeles cop John Berlin (Andy Garcia), burnt-out by his job and a failed marriage, flees to the relative peace and quiet of Eureka, California, where his old partner, Ross (Lance Henriksen) has secured him a job on the small police force. Dead bodies, and parts of dead bodies, soon turn up, and Berlin becomes convinced that there is a serial killer on the loose. Nobody believes him, and there are indications that he is simply imagining connections between the murders - and moreover, that he may be the killer.

It's a set-up fairly bursting with possibilities but Robinson doesn't seem to have a clear idea of how to present his material. The overcomplicated plot unrolls in fits and starts; characters that we never really see again are introduced only to add a greater number of suspects. This is a problem inherent in whodunits: someone has to have done it, and it seems that film-makers would rather be obscure, or downright dishonest, than too obvious. Everything is presented in a confusing fashion; there is no real kick or nasty jolt of surprise at any of the revelations. Robinson strews his red herrings around with caution, but never makes us believe for a second that Berlin is the killer - or that it's just a matter of his big city paranoia getting the better of him. Besides, Helena (Uma Thurman), the beautiful blind girl Berlin is protecting, believes him, and we know that in the world of film, handicapped people possess special powers of perception and empathy.

We may not believe that Berlin is the killer, but enough circumstantial evidence piles up against him to land him in jail. This is the most successful part of the film, a classic Hitchcockian wrong-man theme in which he must prove his innocence and save the woman he loves before the real killer gets her. In the film's best scene, he is interrogated by Saint Anne, a creepy FBI agent played to beady eyed perfection by John Malkovich. He believes Berlin is the killer, and so do the local cops, but Berlin makes bail, and sets out to solve the case.

The ending is simply a cheat - everything leading up to it comes too slowly and the end comes too quickly. The movie is over before Berlin gets the chance to clear his name or catch the killer, so the careful set-up of the wrong man delivers zero payoff. Hitchcock would have been appalled. ❑

Police sergeant John Berlin (Andy Garcia) encounters Helena Robertson (Uma Thurman), a beuatiful blind woman who could be his only link to learnign the identity of a dangerous serial killer in "Jennifer Eight"

The Efficiency Expert

No Laughs are Wasted on This Company

BY JONATHAN SARNER

In The Efficiency Expert, Anthony Hopkins plays Wallace, a middle-aged, immaculately dressed consultant who specializes in downsizing companies. Wallace likens the operation of a company to that of a clock: the parts, none of which should be extraneous , must be synchronized and in good working order so that the time-keeping functions with precision. With his stone-like, expressionless face, Hopkins possesses the look of a machine. After walking in on the smiling, ancient employees of a moccasin factory and their dingy, inefficient accommodations, Wallace experiences a culture shock that doesn't last long. He gradually learns that the factory employees are made of flesh and blood and deserve dignified treatment accorded to humans - not machines.

Bruno Lawrence and Anthony Hopkins in Mark Joffe's "The Efficiency Expert"

The Efficiency Expert

Miramax Films
Directed by Mark Joffe
Starring: Anthony Hopkins
Ben Mendelsohn
Toni Collette
Rated PG

This comic import from Australia is full of endearing characters, mainly consisting of a goofy bunch of employees who race electric toy cars in their spare time. A coming-of-age subplot features a tongue-tied teenage employee (Ben Mendelson) whose crush on the factory owner's daughter has his friend (Toni Collette) frantic with jealousy. The script evokes the light-hearted eccentricities of the Ealing comedies of the forties and fifties like Whiskey Galore and The Lavender Hill Mob.

Perhaps the only actor you'll recognize is Hopkins, who handles a role that's very limited in its emotional range, with authority and aplomb.

Alwyn Kurts dishes out an excellent perfomance as Mr. Ball, the owner of the factory. Ball is a sort of distinguished elf, a cheerful yet eminent septuagenarian who cares as much about the welfare of his employees as that of his own daughter. We learn that Ball has been selling off his assets for years in order to keep the factory financially afloat. When Wallace finally unleashes his inevitable financial prescription, Ball is unable to understand its cruel logic.

Wallace, whose idea of efficiency is grounded in principled non-commitment, is persuaded to participate in a race alongside the employees. And what a race! Imagine one of those sweaty, thunderous climaxes so prevalent in the Tom Cruise action pics—with the camera zig-zagging alongside toy cars. Part of the film's appeal lies in the understated parody with which it delivers its cliched message: that our humanity is rooted in connectedness, and that families need not be based on blood.

Don't be fooled by The Efficiency Expert's foreign qualities. Although it takes place in a suburb of Melbourne in the mid-sixties, it could easily have been set in today's technocorporate America. An instructive parable, it provides a lesson in humanity for our corporate leaders who strangely resemble the mechanized tools that they employ. ❑

Flicks in a Flash

Glengarry Glen Ross
"Lethal Barrage of Words"

This excellent cinematic adaptation of David Mamet's 1984 Pulitzer Prize-winning play loses none of the original's brutal power. It centers on four salesmen (superbly played by Jack Lemmon, Al Pacino, Ed Harris and Alan Arkin) who sell worthless real estate. When the jobs of two are threatened and their valuable customer leads are stolen, their survival instincts go into overdrive. Mamet's jeering, nonsermonizing screenplay is a lethal barrage of words, whose target is free enterprise, American-style. Every character is depraved, and although the salesmen-protagonists are hucksters, Mamet has less antipathy toward them than toward the other principals. One of the most strangely telling scenes has Jack Lemmon smoothly conveying the details of a close to an engrossed Al Pacino. J.S.

Bob Roberts
"Politics is Comedy"

In this clever, extremely funny send-up of the political process, Tim Robbins stars as Bob Roberts, a country singer/songwriter-turned-Republican-Senatorial-candidate. But Roberts is not half of what he appears to be, and that is what one unknown reporter (Giancarlo Esposito) is determined to tell the general public. Robbins, who also directed the film, parodies Roberts and the Republican party to the point of hilarity (just listen to the lyrics of Roberts' songs); unfortunately, Democrats may be the only ones able to fully appreciate the satire. K.M.

Waterland
"History 101"

Jeremy Irons plays Tom Crick, whose unconventional method of teaching history charms his stubborn students into accepting the subject and makes him come to terms with his own lurid past. The eponymous Waterland refers to the flat, marshy English countryside of Crick's youth, his formative psyche. It seems to have an almost magical effect on its inhabitants, provoking romance, insanity and murder. In this adaptation of Graham Swift's 1983 novel, director Stephen Gyllenhaal and director of photography Robert Elswit have produced a remarkably cinematic piece of work. The acting is flawless, especially the performances of Irons, Sinead Cusack (who plays his wife) and Ethan Hawke, who plays a precociously cynical student in Crick's class. J.S.

Pure Country
"Straight To Hell"

The incursion of country into the mainstream continues with Pure Country. George Strait makes his big-screen debut as Dusty Chandler, a veteran country singer who's uncomfortable with his success. After heading for the hinterland and finding that what he was looking for is not there, Dusty falls in love with a pretty young woman named Harley (Isabel Glasser) who is working to become a champion horsewoman. Their romance isn't a cop-out but an easy out and a wayof avoiding any real questions the film has raised about the nature of fame or the downside of success. A.L.

Reservoir Dogs
"A Down and Dirty Escapade"

Reservoir Dogs, the story of a bungled jewelry heist by six independent crooks, acting as a group, is a forceful, albeit flawed, drama that is not for the weak of heart. Writer/Director Quentin Tarentino delivers dialogue that is crude and rude in Mametian fashion, with a spattering of violence that is visceral and unsettling - as when we see thief Mr. White (Harvey Keitel) shoot two policemen to death through their squad car windshield before they can escape from their safety belts. With characters named Mr. Pink (Steve Buscemi), Mr. White (Keitel) and Mr. Orange (Tim Roth), Reservoir Dogs keeps our attention and interest with its mixture of drama and comedy, and is an admirable debut for Quentin Tarentino. THE IMPROPER

BY TOBY STREETT

Yes, tis the season, but why schlepp out into hordes of disgruntled and malicious crowds to buy a Cabbage Patch doll or Trivial Pursuit, when you can place just a little more effort into choosing the ideal holiday gift and truly make someone happy. The choices are endless, and all you need is a pair of open eyes and a little bit of patience. For this holiday season, gift-giving experts are recommending that the politically-correct gift to give is the "Unisex" gift. That is, a present with no gender assignments. And why not start with the Bias-Free Word Finder, a dictionary of nondiscriminatory language.

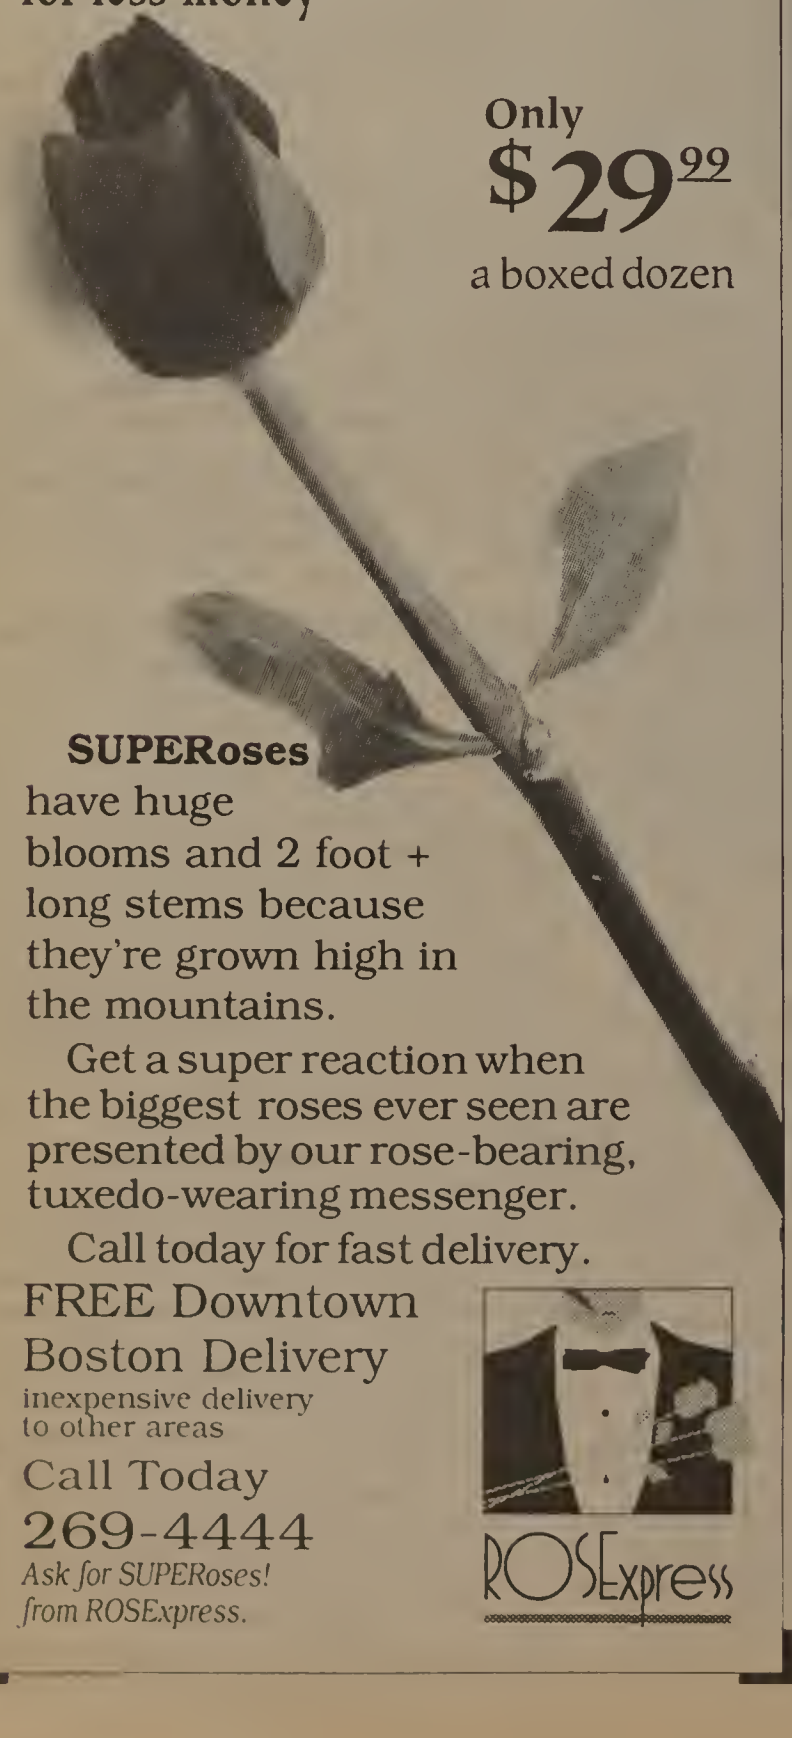
Published by Beacon Press, this clever book offers the ultimate verbal and written jargon to satisfy the most anal-retentive PCP (Politically Correct Person). Examples to live by are "Sewer hole," not "Manhole," "Gripe Session," not "Bitch Session" and "Luck," not "Lady Luck " It's a good piece for the coffee table and won't break your pocketbook (Or "Money holder").



A Le Man 100 from the Waterman line of writing instruments.

Another PC gift is the "gift of culture." If you're not traveling home from India, Africa or Egypt, but want to give a piece of history to your loved one, try something from the Museum Collections store at 176 Newbury Street. With or without their catalog, you'll find an eclectic assortment of treasures which range from the comfortably affordable to the extravagantly expensive. The store features replicas, reproductions and adaptations of objects found in over 50 institutional collections worldwide, with inspiration from such institutions as the Victoria and Albert Museum, the Museum of Modern Art and the White House. Selecting a gift here is easy; From a hand-woven Navajo design pillow ($25) to a Greek Amphora (The c. 530 BC original is in the British Museum, but this one retails for only $280), you'll find something with significant historical bearing.

With all of this sudden attention and migration back to quality, nostalgia and class, the Waterman Pen Company is producing a special-edition line of historic reproductions from some of their best-selling pens in history. If you're tired of losing your writing implements to work associates (or selective kleptomaniacs), buy one of these and you're virtually guaranteed not to lose it: they're not cheap and you won't be loaning them out. One of their most popular pens is the "Patrician," modeled after the famous Waterman classic of the 1930s. This beauty comes in sapphire, emerald and corral lacquer (19 coats of it). With a 23.6k gold filigree band around the cap and an 18k gold nib, the pen retails at $350 and $175 for the fountain and ballpoint respectively.

You'll feel like royalty owning one of these babies and can find one at Pad and Pen in Copley Place or the Bromfield Pen Shop on Bromfield Street, among other stores.

Of course, sifting through store shelves might become tiresome after the 18th or 19th straight day of shopping, so maybe you'll want to give a gift that does anything but sit on a shelf. Like a fish, puppy or Gecko lizard from Fish on a Leash, Inc. or better yet, a workout or fitness package from Boston Body. From a private session with a fitness consultant ($40-$80) to a Body Bar (a foam-padded, weighted bar designed for a complete workout without the use of cumbersome weights: retails for $20-$90), Boston Body might just have the gift for you.

Another body store offering holiday treats has gifts designed for the body - from the body - the spiritual body, that is. Blue Planet, an ecology store, has sensible fashion accessories for both men and women. Check out their reusable canvas lunchbags, "New Wave Notebooks" of recycled paper, re-used circuit board clipboards, "Twig Pencils" from yard clippings and much more. If ever there was a shop for the nineties, it's the Blue Planet. Prices are reasonable and range from $1.00-$99.00.

The Blue Planet also heralds in the decade with one of the areas most complete selections of New Age CD's from artists like Scott Fitzgerald and Paul Adams among others - all packaged in ecologically sound wrappers.

Whatever you decide to purchase on your holiday shopping spree, remember that it's not the thought that counts, it's how much you spend on the gift. ❑

Star Trek: Federation Science

At the Museum of Science

BY CARRIE SHEPHERD

If we ever thought about it, we'd realize that the Enterprise's battles with alien starships wouldn't erupt into the noisy, colorful spectacles that are on TV; there is no sound in space, and lasers are extremely focused points of light, only becoming long beams when they travel through a medium such as fog (also nonexistent in space).

You'll be reminded of such facts at The Museum of Sciences's "Star Trek: Federation Science," which does its best to ferret out the science from the fiction of the beloved series with a number of interactive displays.

You can learn about Newton's Law of Motion (for every action there is an equal and opposite reaction) by sitting in a cart and throwing beanbags against a wall. The cart moves farther if you throw more beanbags harder.

Visitors take command of the bridge of the Starship Enterprise at Star Trek :Federation Science now at the Museum of Science.

Hhhmmmm. How do we apply this concept to Star Trek? OK, this one's easier to see the connection: in the Planet Walker, you sit on a wheeled cart and push off with your feet up an inclined plane, experiencing the replicated feeling of the moon's gravitational pull - 1/16th that of earth's.

You can spin a glass ball filled with what looks like pearlescent soap. It represents one of the gassy planets, such as Jupiter. Actually, it's quite pretty (it would make a nice conversation piece for my living room).

For notice-me types, there are transporter rooms, where you can experience "Virtual Reality." You and your friends stand under some lights, and watch yourselves on a facing screen, which shows you against backgrounds and different objects falling on you. You are supposed to reach out and touch these shapes, but, Ha Ha, - they're not really there. Onlookers can also see you reaching out to these non-existent things on display screens in your projected surroundings.

You can also merge your face with an alien's. On a screen, you line up your face with the monster's, focus a light, and the two blend - you blink, yawn, growl and the alien does too.

But probably the best things for true Trekkies, uninterested in these elementary scientific concepts, are the makeup heads of scary aliens in the series, the costumes from actual episodes, and the Star Fleet Store, where one can buy figurines, T-shirts, mugs and scary alien masks.

Two more tips: it's probably helpful to have an aptitude for video games to get full enjoyment from this exhibit's features, such as commanding a starship, and probably also helpful to escape the hordes of zealous children you'll encounter on the weekend, among whom you probably won't get to play the video games.

"Star Trek: Federation Science" is on view through January 3, from 9 a.m. - 9 p.m. ❑

A Tuna Christmas:

2 Actors, 24 Characters and No Fish

By Nancy Leonard

It seems a little strange that a show called A Tuna Christmas should be making a brief stop in our midst when it's only October. But what would you expect from a town that has an elk hunting season without any elk? Or that considers Waco practically a distant country?

Even if the seasonal activities would have more resonance later in the year, Christmastime in Tuna, Texas becomes a splendid opportunity to show off the eccentricities and vagaries of life in the state's third smallest (and wholly mythical) town. With some 22 perfectly pitched, quick-change characters of varying peculiarity dotting the Shubert Theatre landscape (and a half dozen others unseen in the wings), there's plenty of delight in this two-person tour-de-force.

And the talent is timeless. A Tuna Christmas is the sequel to Greater Tuna, which you may recall had a successful run in the early 1980's at the Charles Playhouse. Both works were written by Jaston Williams, Joe Sears and Ed Howard. The first two play all the roles, and their colleague directs. This time round, the action takes place on Christmas Eve, where the plot-making suspense turns on who will win the yard-decorating contest, and on whether the electric company will douse the lights on the community theatre's performance of A Christmas Carol. Oh yes, there's another local tradition: a Christmas Phantom mysteriously strikes one of the outdoor displays, depending on who deserves it.

The point of the sequel, like the original, is the seamless procession of extraordinarily diverse people, vividly and impeccably brought to life by the two actors. The evening begins at radio station OKKK, where announcers Thurston Wheelis and Arles Struvie bring us up to date on local events and set a conservative tone. With just a few light switches and re-arrangement of decorated trees, we get to visit various Tuna households.

In short order, tall, burly Joe Sears becomes Bertha Bumiller, a doughty matron with a big bouffant hairdo and Christmas-colored double-knits, trying to keep family spirit alive despite a wandering husband and ungrateful children. Then, he's Aunt Pearl Burras, whose black oxfords, cane, and pearls belie the playful spirit that gives pesky blue jays a fighting chance and a nephew a new start; Inita Goodwin is the long-suffering waitress at the Tasty-Kreme and Joe Bob Lipsey plays the hypoglycemic and very sensitive little theatre director.

Almost wispy by comparison, Jaston Williams shines as Didi Snavely, a snarling gun shop owner ("If we can't kill it, it's immortal!"), whose tree could equip a small army; lovestruck teenager Charlene Bumiller and her delinquent twin Stanley; rabidly animal-loving Petey Fisk of the humane society; snobby, pastel-draped Vera Carp, who has won the contest for 15 years; and the ever-aspiring waitress Helen Bedd.

In addition to the principal characters, the two men dart rapidly through many other impersonations, giving us a rich sample of the lunacy and woe abiding in rural isolation. Director Howard keeps the proceedings smoothly and energetically on track, although the hi-jinks could use a bit more focus and punch. The intent was a gentle satire, with lots of humanity amidst the humor and absurdity, but the satire is upstaged by the "real people" concerns and seasonal sentiments.

Loren Sherman designed the multi-purpose set, which has a schoolroom feel with a projection of a big sky and distant mountains above some institutional wainscotting. The stage is bare except for a formica-topped table, a pair of chrome and vinyl chairs, and those very personalized Christmas trees. Linda Fisher's costumes are sort of 1960's leftovers, with fashions traveling slowly to these parts. Judy Rasmuson's lighting actively defines scenes and mood.

A Tuna Christmas is not new. This is its fourth annual tour, although the first time it has stopped in Boston. The actors are brimming with talent in their dead-on creations, but somehow the small-town eccentricity seems less out of the mainstream now. There's a sense of caution in all the merriment.

These "ordinary" people have not even heard of Murphy Brown.

Joe Sears and Jaston Williams star as 24 different characters in A Tuna Christmas, the sequel to the comedy Greater Tuna.

THE NEVER-ENDING EDUCATION

BY ROGER SHORE

Many of Boston's universities have night or continuing education programs to accommodate those wishing to extend their academic pursuits, but who need free evenings or weekends to attend classes. And what better place to chase academic excellence than Boston.

From Harvard to Boston University, and Boston College to Simmons, the city is loaded with a choice of great programs.

For instance, Harvard University's Extension School program exists for students wishing to enhance a degree, complete requisites for more advanced programs, obtain certifications in programs that represent one year of study beyond the bachelor's degree or simply explore new fields of study. Their Health Careers Program has open-enrollment for students who possess a Bachelor's degree but need to complete the requisites for medical, dental or veterinary school.

Their certificate programs include Public Health, Museum Studies and Applied Sciences, among others. Or, if you were to receive a calling from a more advanced level, you could choose their Master of Liberal Arts program after completing their Bachelor of Liberal Arts degree. Registration for these programs begins December 14 and runs through February 5, 1993. Classes begin February 1, 1993. Call 495-4024 for more information.

Regis College in Weston offers an evening Bachelor's Degree program with majors in either Communication, Graphic Arts or Management. Though they offer year-round courses, registration for their spring semester (begins January 19) is going on NOW. A Continuing Education information night will be given on January 7. Interested students can call 893-1820 for further information.

Boston University's Metropolitan College offers a wide range of courses from theology to management history to management. Their classes begin January 11, and they have an on-going registration. Call 353-6000 for course information.

This is only a sampling of the universities which offer continuing education and extension courses, but be sure to explore them all. No matter which school you choose, be it Simmons, Pine Manor and Emmanuel or Suffolk, Northeastern and Boston College, with a little research, there are opportunities waiting to be discovered. ❑

TUSCAN GRILL

Rare Depth In Quality, But An Unbalanced Experience

BY MEG WORDEN AND MARCUS G. APICIUS

A long time ago (or so it seems), Jim and Bonnie Burke opened Allegro on Moody Street in Waltham. Allegro was something of a breakthrough at the time with its menu of cucina nuova, and was a well deserved hit right from the start. Devotees of their style of food were saddened when the Burkes closed Allegro, and so when they opened the Tuscan Grill on the same street last year, a great deal of excitement was generated. This new venture was an immediate smash hit, and has remained popular ever since. Inevitably in these circumstances, the two restaurants invite comparison, and we certainly went there with high expectations.

The Tuscan Grill is a small storefront-type restaurant with only limited seating, and very little space for waiting. The room is rather long and thin, and we found it to be claustrophobic. The walls on one side are pink, with grape-festooned candelabra sconces, while the others are painted to resemble ruined ancient columns. The inevitable open kitchen is at the back. Throughout the evening, we found the noise level to be overwhelming, to the extent that we found it almost impossible to communicate with the waitstaff. We also managed to hit a very hot evening when the air conditioning had broken down, so this admittedly played a part in forming our opinions.

As soon as we were seated, we were given a dish of wonderful big, fat black olives that seemed to contain a hint of cumin, and which immediately put us in a good mood. The onion bread delivered to our table was also very good. The menu itself contained so many interesting selections that in order to try as large a cross section as possible, we decided to order appetizers and half portions of pasta before moving on to the entrees. As the evening wore on, we found to our surprise that the food was far more inconsistent than we would have expected, and ran the full gamut from outstanding to appalling.

The roasted littleneck clams ($6.95) were tender and literally burst with flavor in the mouth; one member of the party confessed he had never had better clams. These were served with a delicious arugala and pancetta salad. Wood grilled squid ($4.95) was also nicely tender, having a pleasant wood-smoked flavor. The tomato, caper and olive sauce that accompanied it was also very good. Carpaccio ($5.95) can be an unpredictable dish, and if prepared by the wrong hands can be deadly dull. Here, it was served with a pleasant, though not exciting Tuscan salsa rustica (made from bread and olive oil) and romano, which gave it a nice understated cheese flavor. The oak scented bruschetta two ways ($4.25) sounded good from the description, but was very disappointing. The better of the two was topped with oven dried tomatoes and fontina cheese; actually the topping was good, and had a nice olive oil flavor to it, but the effect was ruined by the bread, which was dried out and tasted stale. The other consisted of an even drier bread topped with a very bland eggplant puree.

Pasta was one of the particular strengths of the kitchen at Allegro, and we were delighted to find that the tradition carried over to the Tuscan Grill. Every pasta dish we tried was outstanding. Fettucine with shrimp and asparagus ($14.95) was beautifully balanced, with the pasta picking up the asparagus flavor (and the shrimp was nicely tender). Best of all was the linguine with tomatoes, garlic, oil and fresh herbs ($11.75), devastatingly simple, and absolutely perfect. Sadly, the less said about the risotto ($13.95), the better. The sticky, stodgy, solid mass was so awful, we sent it back to the kitchen.

The entrees evoked some mixed reactions; we couldn't fault the potato crusted cod ($13.95), which was ethereally light and melted in the mouth; it came with lobster and fava beans - an unusual combination that worked. We simply adored the beans. The wood grilled and balsamic basted tenderloin steak ($15.95) was perfectly cooked, but was extremely bland, yet its accompaniments were just great. These included garlic mashed potatoes, some lovely roasted yellow peppers and some absolutely wonderful grilled portabella mushrooms. The osso bucco ($15.25) was rich and tender, and appropriately came with a marrow spoon. The sauce had depth, and periodically surprised us with sudden orange flavors, while the accompanying green beans with garlic were wickedly good. Regrettably, the dish was marred by both the inedible saffron risotto and the marrow, parts of which tasted rather stale. A special of the day was spit roasted pork loin with grilled vegetables. A nice smoky flavor permeated everything, but the meat came out a little too dry. From the vegetable side dishes, we tried the grilled butter and sugar corn off the cob with basil butter ($2.25), but found the corn too starchy, and we couldn't taste the basil.

Angiela Wooldridge

For dessert, we had a refreshing strawberry and melon sorbet, an overly "minty" mint chocolate ice cream (wrongly described as gelato - gelati do not contain cream, and this did), and the ubiquitous tiramisu. The tiramisu had dried out and gave us the impression it had been sitting out too long.

The Tuscan Grill has a small but good wine list, and is blessed with a very helpful and knowledgeable host who is happy to help you with your selection. If you're too shy to ask, you can't go wrong with the house wines, which are very drinkable, and very reasonably priced.

It's quite a long way to the Tuscan Grill, unless you happen to live in Waltham, so is it worth a special trip? Would we go back? Well what do you think? ❑

In Vino Veritas

Wine Etiquette for Modern Lovers

BY JONATHON ALSOP

The US of A has a long way to go before it can scrounge up enough native winemakers and wine lovers to exhibit anything like real American wine culture. Instead, wine culture has been replaced by a stiff wine etiquette that's an unrelated void around the free, sensual joy of wine.

We Americans are knee-deep in wine inhibitions that dove-tail nicely with images from "Our Puritan Past" all the way up through Prohibition and Norman Rockwell's wineless Thanksgiving dinner icons. Until the 1970s, wine in America was an exotically distant and subversive imported thing. Granted, wine academia reeks of class distinction, but it also harkens back to America's cultural inferiority complex with Europe (kind of a sore subject).

Wine etiquette in restaurants centers around the tasting and approving of the wine by the host, but in fact, the anxiety begins long before. For many people (devoted wine lovers included), the ritual of ordering wine heralds a prime opportunity to look foolish in front of family and friends - while making an expensive mistake.

First comes the ridiculously over-priced wine list; at best, unfamiliar or arcane - at worst, uptight and incomprehensible. Then, the formal presentation of the wine. At this point, you recognize the label (if you're lucky). Now, for some reason, the server is forbidden from opening the bottle of wine ON the table, and what follows is a painful display of a lacking of dexterity. Holding the bottle clumsily, the server opens it standing up. Why, no one knows. Usually it's something I'd rather not see.

Next, the cork exam. As long as it's intact and not falling to pieces in your hands, you have nothing to say about it except maybe, "Anyone else want to feel up the cork?" For a while, Crosswoods in Connecticut was printing "In vino insania" on their corks, and that at least amounted to some motivation to perform the exam. Some people expect you to smell the cork, but take my word for it: it smells like a hunk of wine-soaked cork. It's disgusting. After the server pours out a little taste, you try to remember how this routine goes again: is it swirl-sniff-slurp or sniff-slurp-swirl? Whatever. You drink it down and try to say something like "a homey little wine, uncertain in it's presumptuousness, yet OK." Once past this point, you're home free. The wine's on the table, and if you can get over yourself, it's time to enjoy it.

On a practical level, I don't know what to do about this except to head the ritual off at the pass and maybe diffuse some tension. Once the bottle is opened, I always pour the wine, and that seems to help things feel more natural and comfortable.

Wine etiquette today is like a wall that keeps people distanced from their preternatural ability to enjoy wine and life. I'm certain this was never meant to be; it's definitely an unhealthy aberration. Like all walls, it needs desperate deconstruction.

ing at its finest in a casual dining atmosphere. Crossroads offers a traditional brunch menu highlighted by their homemade breads and muffins. From 11 - 2 take advantage of the "all you can eat" special for just $5.95. Don't forget the kids who receive half off their meals if they're 10 or under.

Hampshire House

84 Beacon St., Bos. 227-9600
Overlooking the Public Gardens, this oak-panelled Georgian interior serves dishes as rich in diversity as the homemade sauces that accompany them. The Eggs Ellington is a lovely combination of a tender fillet, poached eggs and Bernaise sauce, that though well portioned, still leaves space for their Creme Caramel or Magnolia Pie. The Creole Omlette is another entree that is sure to tempt your palate. New Orleans Jazz Brunch served 10:30am - 2:30p, $12 - $16.

Harbor Terrace

296 State St. at the Marriot Longwharf Hotel, Bos. 227-0800
A veritable smorgasbord with over 60 breakfast, lunch and dinner items awaits you at the harbor terrace. Take in the harbor vista at this Sunday buffet from 10am-2:30pm. $21.95; under 12 half price.

Hungry I

71 1/2 Charles St., Bos. 227-3524

Pinot Noir from California. Saturday November 7, 2-4pm, do not miss this one, new arrivals from Cotes-du-Rhone, 1989 Guigal and others. Blanchard's in Allston, tastings every Friday 5-8pm and every Saturday 2-5pm. Winecellar of Silene, Copley and Waltham, Fridays 4-6:30pm and Saturdays 2-4:30pm. Marty's in Allston, Saturdays 1-3pm. Grill 23 & Bar: Wednesday evening tastings with dinner.

Politically Incorrect Wine

Springbok Shiraz (smoky and odd), Pinotage (tannic) & Chardonnay (very ripe, very tasty and reminiscent of Aussies about three or four years ago). Others, Cab & Sauvignon Blanc. Marty's, 2/$10. The reds are well-made, but meaty tasting and not for me. The whites were good, though. Kanonkop, another recent South African arrival, features a bad militaristic cannon on its label amplifying an image of colonial oppression that takes home the first Politically Incorrect Metaphor Prize for Wine. In a similar vein, Chilean wines are raging in popularity right now, and those godless swine haven't exactly cleaned up their acts in a couple of decades either.

Fine Wine On A Tight Budget

Marty's, Allston & Newton: Chateau St. Jean Vin Blanc $5. Beacon Beverage, Brookline: Chateau Ste. Michelle '86 Cold Creek Vineyard Chardonnay, about a case of this stellar wine left, asking $9 by the bottle, I paid $5 by the case.

Bad Day At Le Roche Noir

September 22 was not a good day for wine grapes in the French Rhone Valley. Storms hit many parts of Chateauneuf-du-Pape, Gigondas, and the southern Rhone very hard. Torrential downpours alternated with periods of marble-sized hail. The region of Cairanne reported 10" of rain in one day. In one tiny village in the Cote de Ventoux (home of the despicable La Vielle Ferme), 40 people died. Chateauneuf got about a fourth of its harvest in before the storm. Cote-Rotie had picked nothing. Many vineyards won't even yield a vintage in 1992. It was just too muddy to pick any grapes of value. 1992 will end up being one of the worst vintages of the Cotes-du-Rhone Villages ever. ❑

"My wine choices for the Thanksgiving meal change every year, but one basic premise remains the same: whether white or red, keep it light in style — 'oaky' Chardonnays and rich Cabernets add too much weight to an already intensely flavored meal."

BY MARGE CHRYSSOSTOMIDIS AND PETER MCNAMARA

OH, OH—IT'S NOUVEAU

It's Beaujolais Nouveau time again! Dan Holmes of Boston's Downtown Cafe has every intention of being the first to make it available in Boston - he tells us the wine is arriving by limo at 6:30 am on November 14! For information, call 338-7037. If you can restrain yourself for a few more days, Watertown's On the Square will be offering the wine on November 20. For information, call 923-1522.

IT'S A TURKEY

If you don't feel up to cooking at Thanksgiving, don't forget that many local restaurants (and not just the hotel restaurants) put on a lavish meal for the occasion. It's certainly worth calling your favorite restaurants to see what they are offering this year. At press time, it was too early to obtain information for you, but in past years, in addition to the hotel dining rooms, these restaurants were open: Marino's (Cambridge), the Harvest, Veronique, St. Botolph Street Restaurant, Peppercorns, 1280 Beacon, Hampshire House, the Averof, and the Club Cafe. Meanwhile the new owners of On the Park (in the South End), are still trying to decide whether or not to open.

WHAT'S COOKIN?

We recently came across a nifty little local publication called The Cookbook Review. It comes out every two months, and probably should be required reading for cookbook freaks. Each issue contains comprehensive reviews of new cookbooks, with ratings that tell you how useful, accurate, etc. they are. Recipes are included, as are interviews with cookbook authors, descriptions of interesting new products, and announcements of local forthcoming food-related events. If you are short of gift ideas for the gourmet cook on your list, this could be the perfect solution. It's available by subscription only; call Lise Stern at 868-8857 for information.

A GOURMET HOLIDAY

And talking of gift ideas for the Holidays, we came across some delicious and unusual gourmet products that can be ordered by mail: Berkshire Berries, R.D. #1, Chester MA 01011, tel. (413) 623-5779 sells homemade jams and jellies with a difference. As well as the conventional kinds made from fruit, they also make what they call hors d'oevre jellies, with flavors like horseradish, garlic, garlic raspberry, green pepper and red pepper. Smith's Log Smokehouse, Brooks, Maine, tel. 1-800 428-3698 (or 1-800-287-4418 within Maine) has a large selection of smoked meats; their helpful catalog provides detailed descriptions of each item, together with serving suggestions. Their products include blackstrap hams, beef jerky, smoked turkey, scrapple, hot dogs, chorizo, kielbasa and honey peel salami (made with honey and orange peel). Couture's Maple Shop, Box 147, Rt. 1000, Westfield, VT 05874, tel. (802) 744-2733 has maple sugar products ranging from the traditional (syrup, sugar and candies) to the unusual, like maple french dressing, maple spread and maple jelly. Nature's Own, Beacon Hill, Chelsea, VT 05038, tel. 1-800-258-7030 sells herbal tea blends made from Vermont-grown wild ginseng. Eight different blends are offered, each with its own particular flavor and beneficial characteristics.

NICE BUNS

Looking for some irresistible buns? Big ones or small ones? The answer is Sticky Wicked & the Bunnettes, distributed by Buns of Boston. Created by Meri Bond, these all natural buns come in pecan and cinnamon raisin flavors in large and small sizes. Local outlets include Barsamian's, Geoffrey's Cafe, the Bank of Boston Building Lobby, the Greenhouse Cafe, and The Stage Deli. Or call 923-1312 for other locations.

If you own copper cookware, then you know that sooner or later it will require re-tinning. Finding somewhere to have this done has always been something of a hassle, and so we were glad to hear of Tin Lizzie, a do-it-yourself kit. We were a little sceptical, but we tried it, and it really worked. This method is also easy, provided you follow the directions. Tin Lizzie costs $15.00 from Aux Cuisines Inc., 43 Saddle Ranch Lane, Hillsdale, NJ 07642, tel. (201) 664-8775. The kit will reline a 9" pot, or can be used for 4-5 lightly worn pots. ❑

Joel Cohen's Boston Camerata Explores Early Music

BY STEVEN D. BROWN

"I was fooling around with all kinds of music - some classical, some folk, some jazz," said Joel Cohen. "When I was at Brown, the New York Pro Musica came to town and I saw all these grown men and women onstage playing these insane instruments and having a relationship to the music which was unusual in classical concerts at the time. I discovered a whole world there. It seemed to have dimensions of other musics that I was enjoying - classical music because it was written down, and pop and folk because there was a lot of freedom for the performer.

Another thing that's very important - music is fun. It should be stimulating and interesting. You should go out feeling like you have a rush of energy."

Material from The Boston Camerata's new Erato recording of 19th century spirituals and folk hymns, The American Vocalist, will serve as the main source for their opening concert of the season. Also included will be a selection of Amish and Mennonite hymns sung in German which the Camerata will record for Erato later this month. As Cohen frequently does in concert and on recordings, he will present some of the European models that served as the basis for American music. He is quick to point out that although these are hymns, the context in which they were performed was often secular. "It was a social event," he says. "Some Bostonians of the time were outraged that people were singing sacred texts and snorting stuff and drinking wine, that people were actually having fun!"

"I have been collecting oblong hymn books for years," he continues. "American hymnody is a kind of repository for different traditions. A lot of of it comes from English choir music, but the composers who wrote in New England in the 18th and 19th centuries were semi-trained; they could write a tune down but they didn't have the schooling in theory, harmony and counterpoint. So what you get is all of these unconscious memories of things - echoes of Elizabethan madrigals, French chansons, old tune patterns, some of which go back to the Middle Ages and gapped scales.

"In terms of time and place, we tend to lose touch with the past the farther back we go. For most people interested in classical music, that means mostly the 19th century with some forays into the 20th century and some excursions back into the 18th century. Then it becomes kind of vague. One thing that I think is exciting is to poke around in areas of repertoire where there aren't a lot of crowds around. There is a sense of mission in going back. There is a thing about very early music - a kind of primal purity about renaissance polyphony or medieval monody which I find extremely compelling.

"I find wonderful things in standard repertoire and I listen to a lot of jazz - there are all kinds of music that I like, but there are things I get from very old repertoire that I don't get in other places. There are emotions, feelings, states of mind and states of being that I treasure. I just think it's important to have this music around as a choice. It gives your life more possibilities if you can tune in on those frequencies."❑

BOSTON CAMERATA

I also enjoyed the detective work of going back into the roots of your own past and seeing where you came from. All those things worked together well for me."

Cohen's concerts and recordings with the Boston Camerata usually tell a story or make a statement. "The problem of doing early music in a concert hall is that most of the pieces were never intended to be performed in concerts," he explained. "You have essentially music that was associated with functions - church services or social events - party time. When you get into the realm of early secular music, pieces that are very short, the question is how can you occupy the time space of an hour and a half in a way that doesn't trivialize the music. I have tried to evolve ways of associating the pieces with each other and jolt people a little bit.

Moas, Mammoths and Bats

New Zealand's "The Bats" Come Out of Hiding

BY REY ROLDAN

"There are lampreys that have a big circular mouth full of teeth that'll actually suck onto your leg," warns vocalist/guitarist Robert Scott of The Bats, speaking about the weird fauna in his native New Zealand. "We had this giant flightless bird called the moa which was like fourteen feet high. Really, really huge. There are stories of someone always spotting those, but I'm pretty sure they're extinct."

Finding good, pure pop in these days of sonic grunge, mindless beats and Michael Bolton is almost as impossible as spotting a giant, flightless bird in New Zealand (it's a lot harder than it sounds). Occasionally, something akin to pure pop darts out into the mainstream, only to be exposed as yet another EMF in Jesus Jones clothing.

The Bats don't have that problem. Sheltered on the small island off the coast of Australia, Scott, guitarist Kaye Woodward, bassist Paul Kean and drummer Malcolm Grant have polished their own Byrds-esque pop hooks and eluded the baited traps of major label deals, which a number of New Zealand bands have fallen victim to. "It was sort of depressing [watching peers the Straitjacket Fits sign to Arista and The Chills and Verlaines to WEA] while we didn't get a deal," sighs Scott. "But at the same time, we weren't putting in the same amount of work as they had been, touring and stuff. And then we heard that no one was really getting signed in America anymore because things were kind of depressed. So we thought that we were okay not having a major label deal. What we've done now with Mammoth is the right move because even though the Chills are on a major, they've broken up anyway."

Now with record deal firmly in hand, sightings of The Bats in America may not be so rare. "We'll be making our next LP in Boston in December with Lou Giordano [Sugar, King Missile]," he plans. "We talked to him briefly from Australia. He rang us up and talked about what we're going to do. I'm really curious to see exactly what's going to happen with [our music]." ❑

Replacement Torch Bearers

The Wall Flowers Keep the Rock & Roll Flame Burning

BY NANCY FOSTER COLLINS

Being a Wallflower is tiring job. In October, the band finished twenty or so dates with The Spin Doctors. Taking only a short respite while vocalist/guitarist Jakob Dylan and lead guitarist Tobi Miller did a promotional tour of Europe, the band looks toward a tour overseas in 1993. Currently on tour with 10,000 Maniacs, The Wallflowers don't plan to record their second album until springtime. In the interim, they begin their headlining tour in January.

Bassist Barry Maguire believes that although they enjoy the exposure of opening for big draws like Spin Doctors and 10,000 Maniacs, he hopes to establish more intimacy with their fans when they headline by playing places like "the Paradise in Boston, the Bottom Line (NYC) and the Chestnut (Phila.)... We won't have a regular opening act," continued Maguire enthusiastically. "We'll pick up different acts locally. I enjoy seeing new local groups."

Although Maguire claims that the band was "held back by our integrity, our lack of studio tricks, our refusal to aim to please unless it pleases us," their self-titled album was selected from a massive amount of material (they have about twenty songs left in the can). It seems like the hardest part wasn't making the songs but deciding which songs to use. "There were about four songs that all of us agreed on and the rest were a struggle," elaborated Maguire.

For The Wallflowers, Maguire cites The Dead, The Band, early Rolling Stones, but mostly The Replacements as early influences. "When you start playing the blues, then punk, you end up with rock n' roll with an edge," he added. "The Replacements are one of the biggest influences of the band."

As a disenfranchised punk who found solace in the authenticity of The Replacements, I regretted their breakup. "Yeah, who's going to [reignite the rock n' roll fire] now?" asked Maguire, echoing my sentiments.

Having seen The Wallflowers perform at the Roseland in NYC last October, I feel justified in saying that this group not only has the desire but the ability to light and carry the rock and roll torch. Like their musical ancestors, The Replacements, The Wallflowers understand and are committed to the craft of songwriting. Their spontaneity and musicianship keep their songs from being a mere exercise in pop formula. The Wallflowers have an intelligent command of melodies, hooklines, arrangements, musical dynamics and textures. They possess the lyrical depth and musical intensity of the mid-to-late sixties paired with the hardboiled imagery and cutting edge feel of seventies punk.

In addition to the now-defunct Replacements, The Wallflowers feel a musical kinship with fellow Los Angeles groups like "Girls Bones Found who have a song in a movie [Dr. Giggles, in fact. -Ed.] and are working on a deal, Momma Stud who are a soul group who are friends of ours and The Freewheelers who have a recording on Geffen worth checking out."

The Wallflowers are definitely worth checking out themselves with 10,000 Maniacs on November 22 at the Gosman Center, Brandeis University. Tickets are still available. Call Ticketmaster at 617-931-2000 for more info.❑

Europe's Extremely Horny Tour

BY DAVID FENIGSOHN

What could convince The Heavy Metal Horns, one of Boston's best local bands, to take a few months off from their usual busy gig schedule?

Only an offer from one of Boston's biggest national acts, heavy metal hitmakers Extreme. The Heavy Metal Horn four man horn section will join Extreme on the European leg of their world tour.

"[Extreme] had a horn section on their last album Three Sides to Every Story (A&M), and they couldn't do it," explained saxophonist Henley Douglas regarding why they were chosen. "So they gave us a call because of the horn section in our band. They asked us if we would even think about it and we sat down with the guys and decided it would be a great opportunity.

John Vanderpool (alto, tenor and soprano saxophone), Garret Savluk (trumpet) and Hikaru Tsukamoto will join Extreme in 29 cities, including two soldout shows at London's Wembley Stadium.

And Extreme are delighted to have fellow Bostonians along. "I love them. They're the best," said Extreme drummer Paul Geary. "It makes the whole thing a better experience. It fills the music out and I think it's ambitious for us. It's better than having just four of us get up there and whack away."

The new line-up was previewed at a nine-song 'rehearsal' in front of a soldout Avalon at the WAAF Halloween party. The Horns played on a number of Extreme's biggest hits, including "Hole Hearted", "Cupid's Dead" and "Get the Funk Out."

"They're a burning band and the horn lines are really challenging," said Douglas, "but it's going really well. The horn section prides itself on being really together and we walked into rehearsal pretty much knowing all of their tunes. So it's been really working out."

The band's other hornless members will remain in Boston and continue working on The Heavy Metal Horns' upcoming second album.❑

Album Reviews

"Music from the Jesuit Missions of Lima and La Plata" Coro de Ninos Cantores de Cordoba Ensemble Elyma
Gabriel Garrido, Director
K617

Baroque music of Latin America, which has remained relatively unexplored both on concert programs and on CD, has received recent and overdue attention with the Columbus Quincentenary. The centerpiece of this program is the short yet sumptuous Missa San Ignacio by Domenico Zipoli, who studied with Pasquini and Alessandro Scarlatti before journeying to the New World. Four selections by Juan de Araujo open the program, but absent is his zestily syncopated Los Negritos which was featured on a long out of print recording by the late Roger Wagner. Its inclusion on this program could have been easily accommodated. Zipoli, Araujo and the two other composers represented here flourished in South America during the generation just before the era portrayed in Roland Joffe's The Mission. If that film piqued your interest in the music of that time and place, this anthology is well worth owning.

Firehouse
"Hold Your Fire"
Epic

With the success of their self-titled debut, Firehouse forged deep into the pop metal crown with a couple of Top Ten hits and a mega ballad that had high school girls dreaming of prom dates with the Firehouse boys. Now that Motley Crue has lost its singer, Firehouse aims to usurp the glam metal throne with a second coming. On Hold Your Fire, Firehouse plays slow anthem rock with high-pitched choruses like, "We're going to rock you tonight/ You know it feels good/ You know it feels right/ So we're going to rock you tonight." Guitarist Bill Leverty kicks average riffage and tight solos that highlight the album that is otherwise swamped in Danielle Steele-esque love songs like "Sleeping with You", "When I Look into Your Eyes" and "The Meaning of Love." The big surprise of this release is that it contains only two ballads; however, the other ten songs are played so slowly that they all have airplay potential. The goal of Firehouse has been achieved - a beautifully slow, cuss-free album of love songs sung by cute men with nice long hair. Certified Platinum.

The Birmingham Sunlights
"For Old Time's Sake" Flying Fish

There are those purporting to perform in the gospel tradition whose approach is so tidy and cerebral as to eviscerate the music. Not so with The Birmingham Sunlights, an a cappella quintet firmly grounded in the heritage of African-American gospel singing. This group has a keen ear for the vocal timbres inherent to gospel music and for those that simply don't belong. Gospel lies at the very root of much of America's popular music, from the Stax/Volt sound to Rap. The Birmingham Sunlights get about as close to those roots as you will find, without the slightest tinge of the pedantic.

If you are a fan of The Persuasions (who are celebrating their 30th anniversary this year), then let The Birmingham Sunlights brighten your day.

-Steven D. Brown

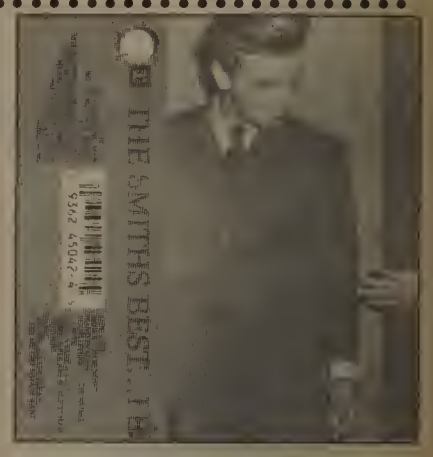
George Duke
"Snapshot"
Warner Brothers

George Duke is a damn good keyboard player - acoustic and synth - who's enough of a chameleon to fit into a lot of musical situations. However, personal identity (as Snapshot shows) is another matter. The playing is adept on this highly produced record and all the parts fit together tightly, but the sense of control on the part of all concerned is a little unnerving. Smooth and cool most of the time, even the funk is laid back. My head nodded, but nothing stuck.

-S. G. Provizer

Jimmy Scott
"All the Way"
Sire

Scott has had all the bad breaks the music biz offers: his high, reedy voice is expressive but not the sort usually associated with Jazz singing; his preference for slow tunes marks him as a "balladeer" and early bouts with the tsar of Savoy Records - Herman Lubinsky - left him unrecorded for long periods. But Scott's career has lately been resurrected and this record caps his return. The sidemen here are among the best - Kenny Barron, Ron Carter, Grady Tate and David Newman - and the arrangements by Johnny Mandel, among others, basically stays out of the way. With an approach to phrasing reminiscent to Dinah Washington's, this 66 year old still sounds remarkably young. Make up your own mind whether his voice is right for the material or not. All I'll say is he's the only one out there who sounds exactly this way.



-S.G. Provizer

Sugar
"Copper Blue"
Rykodisc

No one writes better songs about male/female relationships than Bob Mould. Robert Smith of the Cure comes to mind initially, but after three or four mope sessions, I find myself needing a dose of lithium. What Smith lacks is Mould's intensity and ferocity and the uplifting feeling you're left with at the album's conclusion. After the demise of Husker Du, Mould recorded two very different solo albums; the acoustic Workbook and the very electric Black Sheets of Rain. Sugar, the collective effort of Mould, Malcolm Travis and David Barbe marks his reentry into the 'band' world and the result is a combination of the best of his solo albums and of Husker Du.

Every song on Copper Blue is a brazen, glorious thrust of sound, which allows Mould to run the gamut of the emotional field. From anger to joy to just plain pissed off, Mould packs it all in on all ten tracks, and there isn't a weak song on the album. The initial punk grunge of the opener "The Act We Act" gives way to a tremendous pop chorus. "A Good Idea" is an obvious Pixies tribute with its water pouring sample and a throbbing Kim Deal-like bass line. "If I Can't Change Your Mind" amplifies Sugar's strengths like no other. The rich acoustic lead guitar, the driving rhythm and Mould's biting lyrics ("Tears fill up my eyes/ I'm washed away with sorrow/ and somewhere in my mind/ I know there's no tomorrow" reinforce the notion that Mould is one of the greatest songwriters of our time.

With Copper Blue, Mould has made another landmark recording. Every new guitar band that arrives on the scene has been compared to Husker Du. Memo to those bands: Don't even try because with Sugar, the standard just went through the roof. -Matt Hendrickson

The Smiths
"Best... 1"
Sire

Reissue!/ Repackage!/ Reevaluate the songs! - "Paint a Vulgar Picture" 1987.

Considering that The Smiths were one of the ultimate anti-corporate rock acts, it's a bitter irony that Morrissey, who sang the above lyrics five years ago, has now allowed Sire to unleash this pointless 14-track retrospective. With a live disc and three 'odds and ends' albums already released by the influential 80's British group (Hatful of Hollow, The World Won't Listen and Louder than Bombs), why release yet another compilation? The answer is simple: $$$. In the wake of Morrissey's stateside fame, Sire is attempting to target younger fans who have missed out on The Smiths with a 'definitive' greatest hits release. But for the rest of us who know better, this record is nothing more than a blatant CD cash-in at the expense of fans who were probably in diapers during the Meat Is Murder era.

Best... 1 does contain some of the requisite classics ("Hand in Glove," "This Charming Man," "How Soon Is Now?"), but the track listing still leaves much to be desired. "Some Girls Are Bigger than Others" and "Rubber Ring" are indeed some of The Smiths' finer moments, but to exclude the darker "Heaven Knows I'm Miserable Now," "Asleep" or "Unloveable" is making a mysterious and glaring omission. Also on the absentee list are treasured rareties such as "Handsome Devil," "Accept Yourself" or the cover of Cilla Black's "Work Is a Four Letter Word." Diehard fans who want to make their Smiths shrine complete will still gobble this up like a pint of Ben and Jerry's. Everyone else, however, should stay wise and steer clear.

The "Last Call" Lady

Daisy Buchanan's: A Last-Call Affair

BY LAUREN DARE

Daisy Buchanan's is either Last-Call Heaven, or Last-Call Hell. Heaven because it has the latest last call in Boston (sometimes stretching until 2 AM), and you're usually so drunk when you arrive that the clientele won't bother you. Hell, because you might have to suffer through the block-long line standing next to the only two other women waiting to get in (and they are wearing more hair-spray than CVS keeps in stock). When you do gain entrance, it's hard not to notice that Daisy's is the biggest sausage hang in town. From a certain perspective, this is not a bad thing: one of my friends said that women could get lucky here ten times in a single night, if they were so inclined. On the other hand, arriving unescorted, for me, is an open invitation for a non-stop barrage of attention - wanted or otherwise - from gentlemen who apparently have consumed more alcohol in an evening than Teddy Kennedy has in his entire career.

I personally have devised a very effective method of dealing with the onslaught of unwanted attention in Daisy's.

You first need to develop an "I am not in the mood for this infantile game - Beat it" attitude, which can be employed in a way where you'll always come off looking super cool and the men will be completely baffled. Then, hold your drink up in one hand while crossing the other one over your chest and squint through your cigarette smoke at your attempted charmer (as if you're noticing an interesting, yet disgusting, member of the amoeba species). If you keep this up while refusing to respond to any of his attempts at conversation, he (even the most persistent) will give up.

On the other hand, if you have some energy for flirting and feel a little reckless, you could get through an entire evening at Daisy's without paying for a drink. The ratio is completely in the woman's favor, and the guys are all so obviously on the prowl that they'll do anything if they think they're going to score. You have to be rather careful, of course, or the results could be more than you bargained for.

For example, I once ventured into Daisy's after a disgruntled drinker had been shown the door (actually, thrown out on the sidewalk) and promptly whipped out a gun which he used to shoot out the windows of the bar, an eruption which resulted in the arrival of many over-adrenalized policemen. This is the kind of roller-coaster action which can really add a spark to a night on the town.

But I must admit, guys really don't have a fair time of it in Daisy's, what with the high male/female ratio, and excessive number of drink sluts. One bright spot for them is that the cocktail waitresses are all really hot at Daisy's, but then again, I guess it's not that great, because I've never seen anyone score with one of them.

The summation of an evening at Daisy's is apparent only when you wake up the next morning, hopefully in your own bed (alone or not), smelling like a beer-soaked ashtray, with your mouth glued shut, laser beams piercing your eyes every time you try to open them, and you just have to ask yourself, "Why me? What did I do to deserve this?" And then you remember, "Oh yeah. . . I was at Daisy's last night."

•ALLSTON SPORTS DEPOT 783-2300, 353 Cambridge St., Allston. With 2 satellite dishes and over 20 TV sets, this may be the best place to catch a game outside of Fenway or the Garden. No cover and no dress code. Just a plethora of sports fans chatting- and arguing about, what else, sports - over beers, appetizers and killer burgers.

•ARBUCKLES 782-9508, 1249 Comm. Ave, Brighton. Situated between BU and BC, Arbuckles attracts an even mix of students from both schools and anyone else in search of good food and drink at a good price. 20 oz. drafts for $2.00. The dress is always casual but the atmosphere ranges from mellow and relaxing to noisy and boisterous.

•AVALON 262-2424, 15 Lansdowne St., Bos Boogie to Hip Hop, Funk, House, Progressive and Top 40 music at this colossal dance club. Music varies nightly. Take advantage of the enormous dance floor, placid lounge, and intimate booths. Avalon also boasts having the best light show in town. The crowd here is a good mix; anyone in the mood for dancing should feel comfortable. Cover charge varies. Dressy slacks, collared shirts, and dark dress shoes required. Great place to see live shows. Sun. night is gay night.

•AVENUE C 423-5832, 5 Boylston Pl., Bos A chichi dance club located in the Theatre District across from the Common. Inside you'll find a mix of young professionals who arrive to meet, mix, mate, or just dance up a storm. Cover charge increases after 10 pm, so arrive early. No jeans or collarless shirts. Progressive music Fri. & Sat. nights.

•BILL'S BAR 421-9678, Lansdowne St., Boston. Located in the midst of Lansdowne St., Bill's can be a great alternative to the dance clubs. It caters to a crowd consisting anywhere from punk to preppie. Bill's reputedly has the best jukebox in the city, programed by Peter Wolf. It's loud, clean and showcases live music occasionally. Casual and very relaxed.

•BLACK GOOSE 617-720-4500, 21 Beacon St., Boston. A relaxed jazz club situated a stones throw from the Statehouse. Sit back and enjoy superb live jazz at its best. It's casual, unassuming and you don't have to wear an I love jazz attitude on your sleeve. No cover. Live piano music Monday through Friday from 5-7.

•BLACK ROSE 742-2286, 160 State St., Bos Live, traditional Irish music 7 days and an atmosphere that thrives on patron participation characterize this Faneuil Hall bar whose name is a symbol of Irish Catholic repression by the British. The food is home spun and the beer, well... Irish. The upbeat crowd is composed of students, professionals, locals etc. and they all get involved in the show. Beware, people will know your status by stealing a glance at your claddagh ring! Moderate cover weekends. Casual dress.

•BOSTON BEACH CLUB 227-9664, 300 Faneuil Hall Mktpl., Bos A strong seaside theme prevails. Surfboard tables, plastic sharks, tropical drinks and a guy next to you wearing a Hawaiian shirt adorned with a few dozen neon leis. Live entertainment entertainment nightly from Rock to Reggae and Blues. There is a small dance floor for those who like to bop.

•BULL & FINCH PUB (CHEERS) 227-8665, 84 Beacon St., Bos A recent study confirmed what many Bostonians have assumed for years, The Bull & Finch actually attracts more tourists than most of the sights on the Freedom trail! The TV show Cheers uses the doorway of the Bull & Finch for their opening shot, but nothing else. Still, it offers a comfortable and boisterous neighborhood atmosphere. Try it at least once. No cover. Casual dress.

•CITYSIDE AT THE CIRCLE 1960 Beacon St., Brookline 566-1002. A great place to relax and meet friends while watching your favorite sporting event. Stop by and pay us a visit.Conveniently located at the last stop on the C line, across from the Circle Cinema.

•CLARKE'S 227-7800, 21 Merchant's Row, Bos Located just outside of Faneuil Hall, this is a popular meeting place for Boston singles and college students. Clarke's has that old-fashioned saloon appeal that makes it easier to let your guard down. Expect a line on weekends. No cover. Casual dress. Full menu in the restaurant.

•COMMONWEALTH BREWING COMPANY 523-8383, 138 Portland St., Bos "Let no man thirst for lack of real ale" is the motto at this microbrewery and restaurant featuring glass walls so thirsty patrons can longingly observe the brewing process. The decor consists of copper tables, pipes and beer tanks. Approximately 10 English ales are served on tap as well as "Boston Burton Ale" served frosty cold in the bottle. Close proximity to the Boston Garden translates to before and after game crowds. Live Reggae and Calypso every Friday and Saturday Nite 9:30 to 1:00. Brewery tours are free, but sorry, this isn't the Molson factory. No samples. $3 Cover. Have dinner here and no cover.

•COTTONWOOD CAFE 661-7440, 1815 Mass. Ave., Bos Open daily for lunch and dinner, this casual yet upscale cafe makes you feel like you've landed in the heart of Arizona. The southwestern cuisine (try the grilled specials) is complemented by the adobe booths and multitude of cacti. Relax in the outdoor cafe during the hot summer months.

•CROSSROADS 262-7371, 495 Beacon Street, Boston. Hailed as one of the last neighborhood pubs in Back Bay, this casual hotspot is frequented by locals, students and young professionals. Among its many attractions are three dart boards, cable sports, a loud jukebox and Guiness on tap. Open 7 days a week 'til 2.

•DAISY BUCHANAN'S 247-8516, 242 Newbury St., Bos This Newbury St. late night hot spot packs up consistently with singles on the make. A dark and noisy place, where at least one anonymous source has protested the lack of condom dispensers at the bar. More action as the night wears on, this is a great place to be for last call. No cover. Casual dress.

•FROGG LANE BAR & GRILL 720-0610, 245 Faneuil Hall Mktpl., Bos At this large Faneuil Hall patio bar, the crowd is a mix of tourists and locals. Lofted above the crowd in Faneuil Hall, Frogg Lane offers a mixed menu of American and Mexican fare. No cover or dress code. Jukebox for indoor entertainment.

•GREEN BRIAR 789-4100, 304-306 Washington St., Brighton. This neighborhood Irish pub in the heart of Washington Square has the best combination of the Celtic feel far from the parking mess of Government Center. Entertainment ranges from irish music to the occasional progressive band. The crowd is a healthy mix of neighborhood folk and recent college graduates. Modest cover on weekends. Casual dress.

•HARPER'S FERRY 254-9743, 158 Brighton Ave., Allston. Perhaps Boston's best known R & B bar, Harpers offers live music nightly. Most of the bands are top local blues acts, but on Sun. the amateurs take over with open-mike night. Smoky but lots of fun with darts and billiards and a large dance floor. Moderate cover varies depending on the act. Collared shirts are required.

•LENOX PUB & GRILLE 536-5300, 710 Boylston St., Bos Enjoy casual dining and an extensive array of imported and domestic beers in an authentic British pub. Attracts an older, quieter crowd. No cover. Neat dress. Sun. brunch 11:30am-2:30pm.

•LILY'S 720-5580, 101 S. Market Faneuil Hall Mktpl., Bos The tourists have found a good deal at this cafe piano bar where one can sample quality cheap eats and listen to piano Fri.-Sat. nights. No cover or dress code.

•THE LITTLEST BAR 523-9766, 47 Province Boston. Located near Downtown Crossing. A quick walk from the Orpheum Theatre, As its name implies. The Littlest Bar is quite little. In fact, the place only seats 17 people. Guinness and Rolling Rock are among the beers served on tap. Edibles also served. Hours are from 8:30am-12am Weekdays and Saturdays.

•LUCKY JOHNNY'S 731-6753, 1098 Comm. Ave., Boston. Classic Rock rhythms fill the air at this upbeat college bar frequented mostly by BU, BC and Pine Manor students. On weekends, it gets pretty crowded. So beat the lines and get there early. The barback grill is always open and the smaller underground lounge is a nice place to chat. Dress is a relaxed casual to somewhat dressy. Best of all, there's never a cover.

•MARKETPLACE CAFE 227-9660, 300 Faneuil Hall Mkt., Boston. In a comfortable, relaxed area in Faneuil Hall, sit back and listen to the great sounds of the Brian Walkley Band with special guest Bruce Bartlett every Thursday at 8:30pm. "Street Magic" acapella every Wednesday at at 8:30. Casual atmosphere and dress.

•NIGHTSTAGE 497-8200, 823 Main St., Camb An intimate, well laid-out club with a seating capacity of just 250. National and well known local acts. Blues, Rock, Zydeco, Jazz, Folk and Country are propelled by a sound system that will blast you comfortably to the outer limits of space and back. One of Boston's best up-close-and-personal clubs. Casual dress. Call Ticketron 931-2000 for ticket info.

•PARADISE ROCK CLUB 254-2052, 967 Comm. Ave., Bos One of Boston's best live clubs. Inside, you'll find one of the last of the small stages which still attracts national and international acts. Cover varies from moderate to heavy. Dress is casual. Dancing on non-band nights. For show tickets, call Ticketmaster at 931-2000. Minimum age varies by show. .

•PERRY'S 367-1297, 199 State St., Boston. Upstairs young professionals follow their favorite teams on six TV screens. While downstairs, college students and young professionals dance the night away Wed.-Sat. Located in the Faneuil Hall area, the dress is casual and the popcorn is excellent! Lunch and dinner served 11:30am-11pm.

•PURPLE SHAMROCK 227-2060, 1 Union St., Bos An Irish bar with a touch of Faneuil Hall. Entertainment alternates between traditional Irish music and Dj dance music. Giant-screen TV. Moderate cover varies. Casual dress. Full menu.

•RATHSKELLER 536-2750, 526 Comm. Ave., Kenmore Sq., Bos Affectionately known as the Rat, this is a rock club with staying power. Past headliners have included the Police, 10,000 Maniacs and R.E.M. The Rat attracts a hardcore alternative crowd - lots of black clothes and biker jackets. No cover upstairs. Varies downstairs. No dress code. .

• RED HAT 523-2175, 9 Bowdoin St., Bos You'll feel just like you're in a London pub. Dark and casual atmosphere. Attracts young professionals and Beacon Hill residents. No cover. Casual dress. One of the few places you can still get pitchers of mixed drinks.

•RYLE'S JAZZ CLUB 876-9330, 212 Hampshire St., Camb If you're a Jazz fan, don't miss Ryles. Downstairs you'll find an older crowd listening to traditional Jazz music. Upstairs is funkier with talented fusion musicians. Feel free to move between floors. Cover varies from moderate to heavy. Casual dress.

•SCULLERS LOUNGE 783-0811, 400 Soldiers Field Rd., Camb Renowned Jazz singers entertain here nightly. The bar is well stocked, the chairs are comfortable and the walls are paneled, evoking a mellow mood. The nighttime view of the Charles adds an air of romance. Heavy cover. Casual dress but no jeans or sneakers.

•TS PUB 254-0807, 973 Comm. Ave., Boston. Great food, lively atmosphere and there's always something going on inside. Younger bar-hoppers beware: Only Valid ID's accepted (they're really tough!). Lunches and dinners are delicious and reasonably priced. College and thirtysomething crowd. Never a cover but always a good time.

•THE BARMUDA TRIANGLE 437-1011, 200 Brookline Avenue, Boston. Located just outside of Kenmore Square, The Triangle features live music seven nights a week. Catch Boston's best Jazz early in the week, and kick up your heels to Latin, R&B, Reggae and Rock through the weekends. Full bar. Reasonable entertainment charge after 9:30. Weekly giveaways include free passes, round trip tickets to Bermuda, T-shirts, parties and more!

•WALLY'S 424-1408, 427 Mass. Ave., Bos Treat yourself to unadulterated Jazz nightly at Wally's. Neatly tucked away on Mass. Ave. not far from Northeastern U., Wally's is easy to miss. The only indication that you've arrived is a small white beer sign out front. The atmosphere is dark, smoky and crowded and above all authentic. Mon. is Blues night. No cover. Casual dress. Arrive early to get a seat.

•WARREN TAVERN 241-8142, 2 Pleasant St., Boston. A funky little bar whose clientiele includes young professionals athletes. Reputedly having some of the most beautiful women in Boston. The bar now attracts manly athletes.Stars don't mind hanging out at the tavern because no one bothers them. TV is always on for sports. No tank tops. Bring I.D. Please don't drink and drive.

•WESTERN FRONT 492-7772, 343 Western Ave., Camb A multicultural Reggae and Jazz bar where it's difficult not to get caught up in the rasta spirit. It's dark and dingy inside, but the place sparks alive when the bands take the stage. Cover varies from moderate to heavy. On Sunday nights, visit the Arts Café and enjoy music, comedy, performance art and poetry for only $5. Casual dress.

Hello Mary Francis,Or shall I say "Jack of all trades", operator, EMT, ValletBellman, friend, brother, son. . . You deserve a pat on the back for your professional skills you displayed by saving a man's life. What has the CPH done without you? Congrats Gary, you deserve top be the Mary of the month.Queen Digme!

Oak, Thanks for last night, but you forgot to put the anti-sweat protector in place. Now, my bed is wet! Your Bitch,

Steve, That was a nice party last weekend but I don't think I was entirely up front with you. Your wife was right: I did take some of her lingerie from the bedroom while everyone was out in the living room partying their brains out. She's so irresistible that I also called her yesterday and we're going out one night this week. Hope you don't mind R. Y.W.

Melch,Nice Work. Need I say more?

Andrew,Why oh why oh why did you eat so much on the boatride home from England. The captain of the ship seems distant. Did you really flash the bridge?Lori

Q.,You ravishing piece of manhood. Will D.C. ever recover? In a word - Striking (Exsqueeze me?). Okay. If you're Kurt, Lynchie's Gere and Stuts is Cruise, who's Chi? Gibson? A hoohoohoo. Okay. I can't do no more. Hugs n' kisses, Sis

New York Branch of the Bananaheads,Okay. I'll call the North Carolina guy, but I REFUSE to call the man from Nantucket. After all, his back won't recover for a few months anyway. (yikes!). I just can't decide whether to move to Memphis, Dakota or da City. But my bags are packed and I'm ready to go...Thanks again,Boston Branch of the Bananaheads

AlliSon. Just remember. DR. LOVE! It's official. I'm marrying Curtis. XXOO

S. You can't marry him. What will I eat for dinner? -D

WANTED:

Men with overwhelming memories of a traumatic experience.

The Trauma Clinic at the Massachusetts General Hospital is studying an FDA approved medication which helps people who find it difficult to put traumatic events out of their minds. Eligible volunteers will be treated for 13 weeks, free of charge, with either a placebo or medication. If you are interested, please complete the following checklist:

- ❑ I have nightmares about and flashbacks to the events
- ❑ I have a difficult time putting the events out of my mind
- ❑ I am often irritable and I startle very easily
- ❑ I am afraid much of the time
- ❑ I do not get pleasure out of the things I used to enjoy
- ❑ I feel distant and cut off from others
- ❑ I have trouble with anger

If you have checked three or more, please call the Trauma Clinic at:
617-727-5500 ext 946 (And ask for Mike.)

Attack Back!

Odd as it seems, until you've done it or seen it demonstrated, an actual assault by a putative - and in this course a heavily padded - attacker provides a woman her best chance to learn to truly defend herself. Model Mugging is the name of a powerful course consisting of 5 meetings (each roughly five hours long), in which fierce, focused, and finally exhilarating moves (kicks, elbow jabs, eye-pokes, foot-stomps, groin and head "axings") are taught and then practiced, not against the innocent air, but right on the looming, football-playerishly protected bodies of the male instructors who impersonate muggers. The kicks and jabs are practiced in drills, alone and against heavybags, so that by the time the mugger performs his mock-attack (over and over again), one is focusing on energy and good form. The muggers (balletic and lithe for all their padding) accommodate the fighter by falling over when properly thwacked, though they resist, too and they don't go to a knockout position until the moves have been sufficiently strong. The counteragressive moves come to resemble soccer with a live soccer ball, a kind of sport of skill and speed. But how can all this not be paralyzingly terrifying? First, by doing it again and again, and cheering on ones' fellow fighters, class members feel it becoming somewhat routine. And too, there's the inspirational roaring of "No! Kick! Elbow!" which makes the fighters seem mightier than the mugger. But in fact, the fear that each woman can feel in these faked attacks is like the fibrillating red thump of anxiety that would be present in a real-life attack, so you work both against and with that fear (though in this course, it's safe). Women with histories of rape, incest or violence seem to get symbolic as well as actual power from the classes, and everyone gets bolder and better able to withstand aggression. Teens and men's courses also offered. $430.

Yule Be Glad You Did

This blue Christmas card that stands up like a little theater, framed by curtains and showing a peaceable kingdom of wild and tame animals cavorting together across the globe, can do good twice over. First by communicating your seasonal good will, and second by supporting the Aids Action Committee. The black and white pictures on the AAC brochure reflects some of the spirits of the organization, showing positive (in both senses of the word) patients, both men and women, in homey or sporty settings, displaying a healthy and spiritualized glow. Your purchase of this card will help the Committee with Services (financial, housing and legal ones), case-manager recruitment for patients and basic services such as transportation and meal delivery. This also includes the Buddy program that matches volunteers with people with HIV. It will go towards their education efforts which includes a Speaker's Bureau, Educational consulting, and all sorts of brochures, videos and posters. And it will help in the efforts to shape AIDS-related policy on the local, state, and national (one hopes for much more of that, come January) level. The feeling of the whole effort is remarkably gemutlich. For a donation of $5 per card (or less in large quantities) the AIDS action volunteers will even do the sending of your cards. You may pick them up at the office or call.

Museum Quality

Imagine you had on huge boots that would enable you to stride across the country from museum to museum, or, more to the point, from one museum shop to another, grazing their stylish reproductions. That's what you can do on Newbury Street, at a store that brings together the historic old and the high-style new in the way of furnishings, jewelry, antique adornments, silver and china. Not only are the pieces here "upper" reproductions, they are also often discounted due to having posed for catalogue pictures or because they're overstocks. The window displays delicate twiggy dolls' baby carriages and Adirondack chairs made of barky tree branches and a wooden Teddy Express wagon for children. The shop offers refinedly thin reproductions in silverplate, of inkwells and oval bowls with attached saucer - the kind of thing you rarely find in modern form. Some of it was designed by Bateman, the first woman silversmith. The glassware, fine and etched, looks like occasional treasures you'd find at an antique shop. Because this shop is a sort of "living room of history," there are tapestries (for hanging and on pillows), Colonial deed boxes, Czarist and archaic Greek jewelry (much of it quite low in price), and a silver Humpty Dumpty rattle from the Victorian era (an amusing product tie-in of the last century). And, because it is also a "living room of modern design," arty Michael Graves tea sets and an amazing Hutter candlestand - not merely a candlestick - creates a complex glassy environment for the table. If you're thinking high stature presents for Christmas, here's your reasonably priced chance.

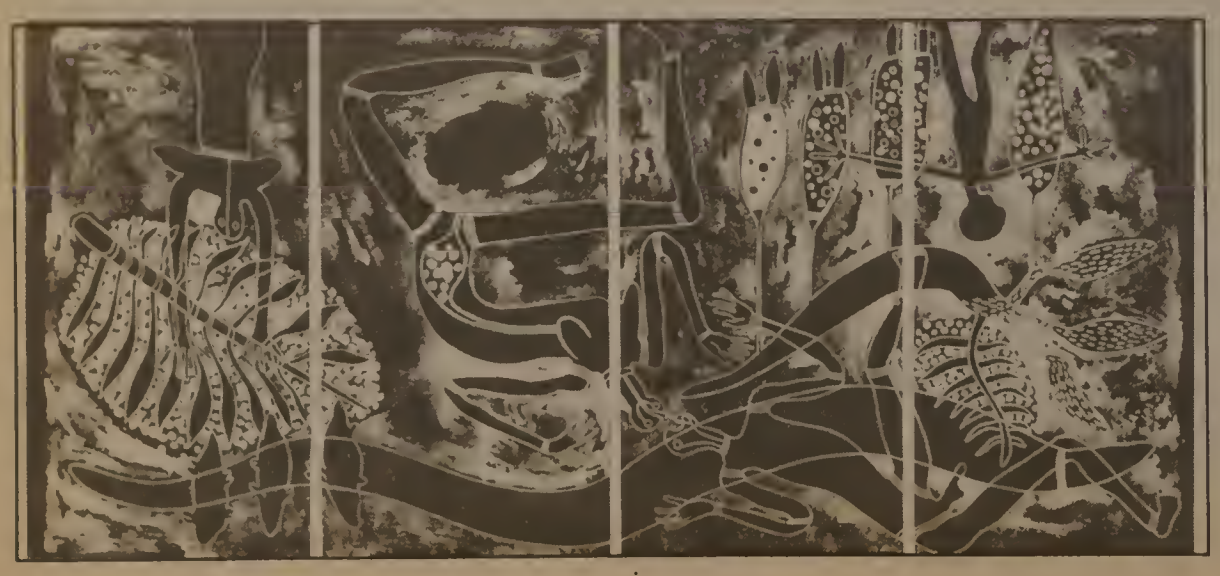
AROUND TOWN

'Twas the month before Christmas... The New England holiday season begins! The 9th Annual Holiday Tree Lighting at Cambridge's Charles Square happens on Friday, November 27. The event will sport colorful lights, delicious food, crafts and holiday cheer. Charles Square is also the new starting point for the Harvard Square Christmas Procession which travels through Cambridge, filling the streets with floats, Santa Claus and Christmas carolers and concludes at its origin point in Charles Square for the lighting of the 40-foot tree. Santa will be there posing for photos with youngsters and all proceeds from the pictures will benefit Cambridge's YMCA and YWCA. Festivities begin at noon; the procession begins at 5 p.m.; tree lighting starts at 6 p.m. at 5 Bennet Street in Charles Square.



Santa Claus Is Coming To Town (Anonymously). A great time will be had by all at the 6th Annual Snow Ball on Friday, December 11 at the Sheraton Boston Hotel & Towers from 8 p.m. until 2 a.m.. Santa Claus Anonymous, Ltd., the non-profit organization responsible for this event, has a mission to contribute substantially to the educational, social and character development of local disadvantaged youths by donating proceeds generated by the Snow Ball. Boston City Lights, a performance and training center for Boston area youths (pictured) is one of many groups that will receive funding. They will also perform at the event. Over 3,000 people are expected to attend. To purchase tickets ($25 each) or make a donation, send a check along with a self-addressed stamped envelope to: Santa Claus Anonymous, 81 St. Botolph St., Boston, MA 02116. After December 1, call for availability at 424-7176.

Interested in world music? Russia's Dimitri Pokrovsky Ensemble will be performing on Saturday Nov. 28 at 8 p.m. in the Sanders Theatre at Harvard University. Pokrovsky was professionally trained in Moscow and, in 1988, Gorbachev honored him with the Soviet Union's highest recognition of artistic excellence, the Government Award - a testament to the scholarship, musicianship and vitality with which he and his ensemble have revived traditional Russian culture and customs. The ensemble has a "library" of over 2,000 songs, including medieval Russian village music, religious music and modern works. Wearing traditional Russian village dress, Pokrovsky and the other players both sing and play, and re-create village dances and pagan rituals. Tickets are $17.50, available at the Sanders box office or Ticketmaster. Call 876-4275 for more info.

The unique, fascinating visions of more than two dozen Aboriginal artists find fresh voices in a new exhibition, "New Tracks/ Old Land," running at the Mass College of Art's Main Gallery until December 19. The "New Tracks" aspect refers to a new medium for Aboriginal art - printmaking. The artwork illustrates traditional Aboriginal viewpoints however - hence the "Old Land." Most of the works in the show have never been seen before in America; the Boston debut begins the exhibition's two year tour of the U.S. This collection of 80 prints explores the rich mythical imagery of an ancient culture that has endured colonialism and cultural encroachment from Europe. Call 232-1555, ext. 504 for more info.

The 10th annual Aids Action Committee's Holiday Auction, the agency's longest running fundraising event, kicks off on Sunday, December 6, beginning with cocktails at 5:30 p.m. Hosting the event this year will be the Silverado at 279 Tremont Street. This year boasts an all new format featuring continuous entertainment, guest auctioneers and a special bonus for the first 250 bidders to register. The auction will have a larger variety of items, such as gift certificates for the Boston area's best restaurants, weekend getaway packages and a helicopter tour of Boston! Admission is FREE. For details, call 437-6200.

HOLY BATMASK! IT'S A COMEDIAN!

An Interview with Jim Lauletta

BY KATHY MATHESON

Course: Comedy 101
Professor: Jim Lauletta
Title: 1,001 uses for a Batman mask

No, we're not talking household uses, like featherduster-turned-potato-peeler. And no, we're not talking one of those cheap, plastic masks that comes with an elastic band to keep it on your face. We're talking a full-fledged, latex/rubber job that covers your entire head and part of your shoulders.

In its most basic function, as comic Jim Lauletta demonstrates, the mask is a good way to get a seat on a crowded subway or to terrorize toll collectors on the Tobin Bridge.

But in more sophisticated capacities, Lauletta can wear the mask, make his eyes bulge out and give a hysterical impersonation of Don Knotts as Batman. If he pulls the mask halfway off his head, so the fringed shoulders are standing on end - voila - the Statue of Liberty. Putting the mask on backwards, tilting it down and breathing really hard (so the pointy Bat-ears move like antennae), he becomes a monster from Lost in Space.

But these are just warm-ups. Another unique - or "exciting" - part of Lauletta's routine are his imitations of celebrity orgasms: Don Knotts, Ted Knight (Too Close for Comfort, The Mary Tyler Moore Show) and Star Trek's Captain Kirk, to name a few.

The 25-year old comic also does impressions of famous people when they're out of bed. His Arnold Schwarzenneger is always a crowd favorite, as is his imitation of Roy Scheider in Jaws: He takes some rubber bands, puts them around his face, flattens his nose and ... forget it. "You have to see it," said Lauletta. "It's pretty retarded."

As a Boston native, Lauletta got his start a la Mr. Saturday Night - entertaining his family. He got his professional start at open mike night at Nick's in 1988; one year later, he was doing it for a living. "I was very fortunate," he said. "Boston is the best place for stage time."

Not bad for someone who, as a keyboard player, attended Berklee College of Music just long enough to realize "that I was not going to be a musician." Lauletta then tried a semester at UMass/Boston and was on his way to becoming a state trooper in New Hampshire when, encouraged by his friends, he decided to try comedy instead. (State trooper, comedian - same difference.)

Luck aside, every comic has to pay his dues, and although success came quickly for Lauletta, "when you first start [as a comedian], you do any gig you can," he explained. "And I've done some hell gigs."

There was the one a little while back when he was on-stage for an hour and 20 minutes (the normal length of a routine is 30-45 minutes) because one of the scheduled comics didn't show up.

And then there was the time where he was hired for a large private party of about 200 people. Because there was an open bar, nobody paid any attention to Lauletta except one little kid that kept harassing him. After a while, the exasperated comic finally just turned to the kid, Batman mask and all, and said in a deep, menacing voice, "I live under your bed!" ❑

Jim Lauletta appears every Tuesday at Nick's Comedy Stop/Boston and on various other dates at clubs around the city.

It's Thanksgiving

- So What's Cooking In Boston's Restaurants?

By Marge Chryssostomidis and Peter McNamara

Of course it's nice to have a family gathering at home for Thanksgiving, but sometimes, there just aren't enough hours in the day to deal with the shopping, cooking and everything else entailed in celebrating this feast. Fortunately, many restaurants in the area recognize this dilemma, and will be open for Thanksgiving. A selection of these follows, ranging from the traditional to the unusual. Don't forget that reservations are required.

Traditional Menus

Peppercorns, tel. 661-2022 will be open from noon-8:00 p.m. A complete turkey dinner is $11.99; other complete dinners offered are: baked scrod ($9.99), 12 oz sirloin ($12.99), 14 oz prime rib ($13.99) or ham ($8.99). Price for ham or turkey for children is $4.99. Copley's Restaurant in the Copley Plaza Hotel, tel. 267-5300, is open from 11:00 am-10:00 pm, and is serving mulled wine and hot apple cider and a five course dinner for $26.25 (children $12.25). Entrees offer a choice of roast turkey, prime ribs, poached salmon or baked ham. The Cafe Rouge in the Boston Park Plaza Hotel (tel. 437-2352, ext. 2352) will be open from noon-6:00 pm. Here you can select from gingered pumpkin bisque or New England clam chowder followed by roast turkey (carved tableside) with cranberry-pineapple chutney and sausage stuffing, while desserts include pumpkin, pecan or mince pie, chocolate pear tart and Indian pudding. You can take the leftovers home with you; the cost is $18.95 (children half price)).

How About Traditional with a Difference?

The Spinnaker in the Hyatt Regency Hotel, tel. 492-1234, is serving from 2:00-9.00 pm. The set meal includes roasted butternut squash bisque, a choice of turkey, prime rib, sauteed veal chop with morel sauce or grilled salmon steak with sundried tomatoes and basil cream, then a visit to the dessert bar. Cost is $27.95 (children $13.95). Parker's Restaurant in the Parker House Hotel, tel. 227-8600 will be open 1:00-7:00 pm. The four course meal includes a choice of shrimp cocktail, grilled duck breast with rosemary sauce, melon and prosciutto or lobster and scallops cilantro in puff pastry, followed by salad or soup, then a choice of roast turkey, grilled swordfish or tuna in a red pepper sauce, boneless quail stuffed with foie gras and cornbread, roast sirloin of beef or grilled veal loin chop on a bed of spinach and port wine. Desserts include Indian pudding and pumpkin pie. Cost is $37.00 (children $15.00). The elegant Plaza Dining Room at the Copley Plaza Hotel, tel. 267-5300, is offering first courses like lobster vol au vent, duck pate with Cumberland sauce and pumpkin bisque with steamed sea scallops. Entrees include turkey, roasted veal loin perigourdine, rack of lamb provencal, coulibiac of salmon with champagne beurre blanc and tournedos. Desserts include pumpkin pie and tulip romanoff. Hours are 11:00am-6:00pm and the cost is $46.50 (children $18.50). At Veronique in Brookline, tel. 731-4800, the menu is a la carte with appetizers ranging from $2.95-$8.95 and entrees $9.95-$19.95; children's portions of many dishes are available at half price. Examples of the selections are pate au cognac, sweet potato bisque, iced cherry soup, roast turkey, duck a l'orange, beef Wellington, stuffed trout, veal Oscar, seafood Valerie, broiled salmon. Hours are noon-8:00 pm. The menu is also a la carte at the Harvest, tel. 492-1115. Appetizers are $4.50-$9.00, and include smoked turkey and acorn squash soup, cashew crusted sirloin tartar, smoked salmon and marscapone ravioli, and baked camembert strudel. Entrees range from $15.50-$27.00; in addition to roast turkey, you will find roast suckling pig, veal and wild mushroom fricassee, roasted rack of Vermont lamb, sauteed medallions of native red deer, broiled swordfish with ginger beurre blanc and pineapple salsa, and other unusual choices. In Watertown, Le Bocage, tel. 923-1210, will have complete meals ranging from $28.00-$38.00, served between 2:00 and 8:00 pm. Appetizers will probably include oysters with tasso ham and gruyere cheese, lobster corn chowder, wild mushrooms with brie, and grilled eggplant stuffed with goat cheese, served with red pepper concasse. Entrees offer a choice of roast Essex native turkey with cornbread and sausage stuffing, braised rabbit with fennel and polenta, tournedos with fresh foie gras, sole with oysters, crayfish and mornay sauce. Desserts will include Indian pudding, bourbon pecan pie, apple tart and banana ice cream. Upstairs at the Pudding, tel. 864-1933, offers one seating only at 4:30-5:00 pm. Enjoy champagne or hot mulled cider in front of the fire, then proceed to the dining room for a four course meal priced at $48.00. Appetizers include New England clam chowder, wood smoked salmon, Wellfleet oysters broiled with pancetta and bruschetta with tapenade. Main courses include sauteed tenderloin of beef with pancetta, rosemary and chianti, New England lobster and scallop pie, rack of lamb with ginger bordelaise, pan seared Atlantic salmon with mustard seed beurre blanc, and roast Vermont turkey. Desserts include a medley of pies and profiteroles with mocha ice and bittersweet chocolate sauce .

So only one of you wants turkey? Several restaurants are serving the regular menu but have made a point of including turkey. For a Middle Eastern touch, try the Averof, tel. 354-4500. The regular manu has been supplemented by a set dinner for $15.00 (half price for children). The dinner includes salads, cheeses, olives, a choice of turkey, roast leg of lamb or ham with yams, followed by Middle Eastern pastries or a choice of pies. Hours are 11:00 am-1:00 am, with Greek music and belly dancing in the evening. Both the Boston and Cambridge Marcella's will be open, and have added turkey ($8.95) to the regular menu. In Cambridge (tel. 547-5000), hours are 8:00 am-10:00 pm, while in Boston (tel. 357-9040), hours are 11:30 am-10:30 pm. At Marino's, tel. 868-5454, there will be two additions to the appetizer menu: a salad of artichoke hearts, baby shrimp, capers and fresh basil, plus ravioli filled with yellow zucchini, ricotta, nutmeg and parmesan, while two special entrees offer roast turkey: one is stuffed with sauteed apples, grapes, fresh rosemary, almonds and breadcrumbs, and the other is stuffed with ground beef, sausage, garlic, breadcrumbs, carrots, fresh herbs and pancetta (both are $14.95). Homemade pies and arance Regina are offered for dessert; hours are 11:00 am-6:00 pm. In the Faneuil Hall area, the Marketplace Grill and Oar Bar Restaurant, tel. 227-9660, will be offering a roast turkey dinner for $12.95 and a roast turkey sandwich for $8.95. The upstairs dining room will be open 11:30 am-6:00 pm, while the downstairs cafe will be open 11:00 am-11:00 pm. The Improper

BY JENNIFER MCCANN

As the holiday season fast approaches, you may be suffering from one of two gift-giving dilemmas - you have very little or no money OR you have money to burn, but no sparks when it comes to imaginative gift buying. The following guide will cater to both season-related problems and provide some funky ideas ranging from the tres expensive to dirt cheap.

For the Person Who Has Everything:

It has been said that the way to a person's heart is through their stomach. Available now at Neiman Marcus is a confectionery wonder that your special someone who has everything will definitely not get two of. He or she will love the clear acrylic briefcase filled with milk chocolate coins each wrapped in gold foil bearing the prestigious Neiman Marcus logo. For just $275.00, your lucky friend can lug around a 9.5 lb case of chocolate coins and be the envy of everyone. Neiman Marcus is at Copley Place, Boston.

If this seems too excessive for your gift recipient as well as your wallet, try an equally tasteful almond crate. At $15.95, this green wood gift box comes with 5 ounces each of cinnamon almonds, dark chocolate covered almonds and Aspen almonds. Available at Crate and Barrel with locations at Copley Place, Brattle St., Cambridge, Faneuil Hall and The Mall at Chestnut Hill.

Something Special for the Artsy Person on Your List:

If you're in the market for a present that reflects your creativity and will impress your artsy friend or family member, look no further. Adapted from a ring in the Museum of Fine Arts collection, the strand of cultured pearls with 1.5 carats of amethyst will dazzle your gift recipient with your impeccable taste and knowledge of fine arts. Retailed at $695.00, this 18-inch necklace comes elegantly gift boxed. MFA members receive a 10% discount on this item. The MFA Catalog's toll free number is 1-800-225-5592 or visit their retail store at Copley Place.

O.K., you've never had $695.00 at one time. Don't worry, for about $5-$25 , you can purchase a stunning necklace and give it your own personalized touch. At Beadworks at Harvard Square, select your own beads in an open display atmosphere and arrange them according to your personal creative style . Choose from a variety of beads such as glass, semi-precious, gold, silver, crystal, wood, metal, porcelain and more. This is an inexpensive chance to impress your friend with a necklace or bracelet that comes from your heart and your hands. Open Mon-Sat. 11-8 and Sun. 12-6, Beadworks at Harvard Square is on 23 Church St., Cambridge.

The Off-Beat Present:

For a mere $11, here's a gift that will leave a long-lasting mark on your special friend - literally. The Nose-Piercing Kit comes complete with a nose-piercing gun, your choice of three starter studs and an easy three-step instruction guide. Available at the Jewelry Gallery on 36 J.F.K St., Cambridge.

Maybe your friend is more concerned with the inside of his or her nose. Have no fear, at $18.00 you can buy the portable battery-powered nose hair trimmer. This handsome and safer than scissors trimmer has sharp stainless steel blades and is less than 4 inches long. It uses a 1AA battery (not included) and is available at Brookstone. This is the ultimate in cutting edge gift-giving. Brookstone has locations at Faneuil Hall and Copley Place.

A Gift For the On-The-Go Guy or Girl:

For those who like to travel in style, Louis Vuitton's "Keepall" is a 17"x8"x11" tote in all-leather and bears the famed monogram. Your friend can travel in complete style for only $850.00. Choose from five fashion colors to tailor the tote to your lucky traveler. Available at Louis Vuitton at Copley Place.

If your friend's travels are only overnight and their idea of a tote bag is plastic and has red letters that spell CVS, here's a suggestion. The Morning After Kit from The Body Shop comes with a blue Coolpack Eyemasque, Elderflower Under Eye gel, 4.2 fl. oz. Body Massage Oil, Kiwi Lip Balm and a washcloth packed in a clear plastic drawstring bag. This $19.75 gift is great for your friend's body and soul. The Body Shop is located on 1140 Mass. Ave., Cambridge and the Burlington Mall, Burlington, MA.

Remember, the busiest shopping day of the year is the day after Thanksgiving, so don't spite the local merchants and stay home and rent videos or something - that would be improper. Happy Shopping!

THE MAINE EVENT

Ski Sunday River

BY ERIC F. PETERSON

Except for January rains, nothing is as painful for skiers as waiting for the first snow of the season. Getting out on the hill is the only cure for the preseason fever that begins after Labor Day, when skiers appear in ski shops with glazed eyes and stroke the new skis while mumbling, "Packed powder, packed powder..." Fortunately, snowmaking capabilities allow ski areas to open earlier every year, some of whom do so before the last Halloween pumpkin is smashed. For skiers at Sunday River Ski Resort, the fever broke on November 1 when the area opened for the season.

Located 180 miles from Boston, near Bethel, Maine, Sunday River has grown from a practically unknown area to become one of the top ski resorts in the country. Sprawled across six connected mountain peaks, the area has 72 trails covering 480 acres of skiable terrain. After experiencing double digit growth in each of the last twelve years, Sunday River was voted the No. 1 area in the East and No. 8 in all of North America in a SKI Magazine reader's poll in October.

To find out what makes Sunday River special, I visited (and skied) for a day last week. But in order to understand Sunday River's positive attributes, you need to understand it's negative ones. For example, there is no phony Swiss pedestrian village with a clock tower and a Cartier store. Nor are there giant concrete parking structures or "Lodge Mamas" walking around in hairy Eskimo boots that look like they're made of mastodon skins. What Sunday River does have, above all else, is great skiing.

According to Skip King, the Director of Communications, the area prides itself on the trails and quality of its snow. "Sunday River spends more money per skier on snowmaking and grooming than any area in the country" said King. To maintain the quality of the snow, the area has 700 snow guns capable of making enough snow over the course of the season to bury every trail with ten feet of snow. That would bury the lifts at some areas. The area also receives an average of over 150 inches of natural snow every year.

Not content to let the snow lie where it falls, Sunday River has a reputation for excellent grooming. Practicing what King calls "the slow grind," the area drives its grooming machines at half the speed of most areas, allowing for deeper penetration and a smoother ride. And it makes the snow nice too. This certainly was the case on the day I skied. Although the snow was manmade and it had rained for two previous days, about a dozen trails were open with surfaces ranging from loose packed powder to occasional hardpack. I didn't see or ski any ice (which ski areas call "frozen granular").

Since most of the mountain hasn't yet had the snow guns on it, I was only able to ski a few trails, primarily in the Barker and Locke Mountain areas (I loved what was there, though). The trails are similar in quality to the legendary "Front Four" at Stowe. They take full advantage of the terrain, with plenty of humps, rolls and compound fall lines to keep things interesting for even the most advanced of skiers. Skip King explained that "While certain trails may not be hard to ski, they are hard to ski well." Best of all, in spite of covering six peaks, Sunday River has almost no long cat tracks connecting the various areas. The runs are laid out so that it's easy to zig-zag across the mountain without being forced to make a five mile traverse while stuck behind a beginner who's weaving like a drunken sailor. Two new lifts, including a high-speed, detachable quad will increase the uphill capacity to 24,000 skiers per hour and will eliminate several bottlenecks on the mountain.

The top of the mountain at Sunday River...

Several years ago, Sunday River redesigned their entire ski school program. In fact, it's not even called "school" anymore. Apparently the word held too many bad memories of pimples, detention and locker room wedgies for some people. Instead of ski school, the area has a "Skier Development Program" which uses a teaching technique developed at Sunday River called "Perfect Turn." The program is a radical departure from traditional ski schools where you have some Austrian guy named Hans telling 15 bewildered students what they're doing wrong. Instead, Perfect Turn instructors ("Ski Pros") focus on something you're doing right and build on that. Skiers place themselves in a class by watching a video and picking the level closest to their abilities. Classes are limited to six skiers and leave from the top of the mountain every half hour, all day long. The result is that skiers get more on snow instruction time than in a standard class and learn more as well.

There are plenty of lodging alternatives at the mountain, ranging from a ski dorm to slopeside condos. Opening December 22 is the new $8 million Summit Hotel. Located trailside, the hotel will be the largest of its kind in the East, with 147 rooms, restaurants, a health club, conference facilities, day care and an outdoor heated pool. It promises to be a world class addition to the area. In fact, you can sit in the pool while sipping a beer as you watch skiers flounder down the mountain above you. Doesn't get any better than that.

Nightlife has traditionally been Sunday River's weak spot. That will change with the addition of seven new bars and restaurants in the area, including a brewery/restaurant and two Chinese places. In case you eat at one of the latter and you're hungry an hour later, or if your nightlife continues until morning, check out the Red Top Truckstop and Diner. This place is sort of a convenience store, gas station and diner all mashed into one shed-like building. It also has the best home fries I've ever eaten, and I love a place where they don't even have to ask if you want ketchup on your eggs. They just hand you the Heinz.

The best bars in town are The Backstage and Suds Pub. The Backstage has pool tables (the only ones in town) and Suds is a perennial hot spot with live music and "Hoot Night" on Thursdays when anyone can take the stage and sing. In all, Sunday River was worth every minute of the three hour trip it took to reach there from Boston. The scary part is that it's only November. I can't wait until January. ❑

Special thanks are owed to 12 year old Josh Mason of Poland Springs (yes, there really is such a place) for "adopting" me on a lift, showing me around the mountain and telling me where to find all the best jumps. No ski area could ask for a better ambassador. If you get up to Sunday River (and you should), be sure to look him up.

DRACULA

"Anemic and Unquenching"

Francis Ford Coppola's Dracula, while lushly painted, is anemic. By turning Bram Stoker's vampire into a lover, Coppola has endowed the Count with passion but made him impotent of horror, despite Gary Oldman's superb performance. Winona Ryder (Mina) and Keanu Reeves (Jonathan Harking) provide teen star value; the roles of a Victorian couple are over their heads, and discovering their motivation for their actions is as arduous a task as finding the Count's secret resting place. Anthony Hopkins as Dr. Von Helsing exhibits how to bring imagination and dash to a character, but neither he nor Oldman can give an undead movie life. It's Is all Coppola's show, directing for directing's sake, more often obvious and unexciting than the contrary. T.S.L.

GLENGARRY GLEN ROSS

"Lethal Barrage of Words"

This excellent cinematic adaptation of David Mamet's 1984 Pulitzer Prize-winning play loses none of the original's brutal power. It centers on four salesmen (superbly played by Jack Lemmon, Al Pacino, Ed Harris and Alan Arkin) who sell worthless real estate. When the jobs of two are threatened and their valuable customer leads are stolen, their survival instincts go into overdrive. Mamet's jeering, nonsermonizing screenplay is a lethal barrage of words, whose target is free enterprise, American-style. Every character is depraved, and although the salesmen-protagonists are hucksters, Mamet has less antipathy toward them than toward the other principals. One of the most strangely telling scenes has Jack Lemmon smoothly conveying the details of a close to an engrossed Al Pacino. J.S.

UNDER SIEGE

"A Blank Slate"

Ruthless terrorists take over a battleship, and only one man can stop them. . . . Steven Seagal makes a solid attempt to join the A-list of Hollywood action heroes in this big-budget thriller, which plays lot like a horizontal Die Hard, only not as good. It is, however, Seagal's best movie to date, with enough violent deaths and explosions to keep things moving along, although the outcome is never in doubt. Movies of this type are really only as good as their bad guys, and Tommy Lee Jones and Gary Busey, two erstwhile Oscar nominees, are more than adequate for the task - they have enough bad skin and big teeth between them to equip three terrorists. Both overact a bit, but it's a refreshing contrast to the minimalist, shall we say approach to acting taken by Seagal, whose empty visage is not so much a stone face as a blank slate.

A.L.

In a fitting role and a fine performance, Joe Pesci plays the squat and fast-talking '40s shutterbug Leon Bernstein, who unwittingly becomes involved in a plot involving international conspirators and the Mob. Director /writer Howard Franklin incorporates sensuous visual imagery into the film, with '40s-style lingo for dash. Barbara Hershey Is Bernstein's love interest, a society gal and club owner who feels out of place among the well-to-do. Ultimately Hershey's performance in unmoving, but Pesci compensates and handles his first major lead role with steadiness and assurance. The plot resoluation may come a little quick for your left hemisphere, but your right one is sure to enjoy the aesthetics of the film.

X

BY TIM LEMIRE

Pre-release anxiety over Spike Lee's movie of Malcolm X's life largely concerned Lee's portrayal of the civil rights leader: as an inculpable hero or a militant radical, a martyr, a man, a demagogue, what? The result: the epic movie X, an even-handed, engaging treatment of the civil rights leader that is easily the finest of Lee's now-six movies.

The finest performances in X belong to male characters, especially to Albert Hall, playing Brother Baines, Malcolm's initiator into Islam, and Delroy Lindo as West Indian Archie, Malcolm's crime boss father figure. Regrettably, screenwriters Lee and Arnold Perl have consigned female characters to the background (as seen with Angela Bassett, playing Betty Shabazz, Malcolm's wife) or else have given them low-key roles (as with Kate Vernon, in a vapid performance as Malcolm's white woman lover)

X, of course, belongs to Denzel Washington. To compare the articulate, iron-gazed Malcolm at X's conclusion with the hustling, slick-tongued Negro caricature at the movie's beginning, is to realize the enormous talent of Washington, who makes Malcolm's evolution as a thinker, activist and man a wonderful thing to watch: the movie, three hours and 17 minutes long, feels half its length.

We follow Malcolm from his hustling days in Boston (which eventually land him 14 concurrent counts of 8-10 years in Charlestown), to his rise in the Nation of Islam, his tutelage under Elijah Muhammed (Al Freeman, Jr.), and his subsequent rejection of the Nation and independent foray into the civil rights movement. The writing team of Lee/Perl does a fine job of showing how Elijah Muhammed rescued Malcolm spiritually (beginning in prison), and later alienated him ideologically and politically. The transition is smooth, and insidious.

In one scene, Malcolm sits alone with Elijah Muhammed and listens intently to his serene discourse on women: "They should be half the age of the man, and then some, and if she can cook and clean and sew and stay out of trouble ...." When we find out later that Elijah Muhammed is suspected of bearing (and not supporting) children out of wedlock by his female followers, we, along with Malcolm, feel the scales fall off our eyes. Writers Lee and Perl present the accusations as truth, but display how Malcolm's faith easily falls into blindness.

For all the admirable balance in the movie (not all white people are "white devils," not all members of the Nation of Islam are crooked), Lee is, at times, uncertain and uneven with his directorial hand. Washington, as Malcolm, narrates snatches of the movie, then his voice disappears for over an hour. Also, in its opening, X contains quick flashbacks and swift scene changes that are at odds with its subsequent smooth, continuous flow. The ending bears a docu-footage montage similar to the opening sequence of JFK, and contains live action of people carrying Malcolm X placards in New York and Soweta (scenes that appear forced, dramatized and unnatural compared to the rest of the movie). Lee could not resist, as he is wont, hammering the message home.

At the film's conclusion, over images of the real Malcolm, is a panegyric of the fallen leader, asserting that opponents of Malcolm will try to paint him as angry, militant, and radical. "To those people," says the voice, "we ask, 'Did you ever hear Brother Malcolm? Did you ever see him smile? Did you ever touch Brother Malcolm?'"

Spike Lee presents many people with a first opportunity to do so, and "to do so" is encouraged, if not just for the movie, then for the message. ❑

Brattle Lays Out A Feast Of Food Movies

BY TIM LEMIRE

In preparation for the face-stuffing foodfest that comes with Thanksgiving and Christmas, you may want to sample the selection of food movies this month and next at the Brattle Theater in Harvard Square. "Feasts for the Eyes" is a Wednesday night series that presents the finest of films where culinary delights deserve recognition for supporting acting roles.

Last Wednesday, the Brattle showed Babette's Feast (1987) and The Story of Boys and Girls (1991), two films that celebrate the power of food. In the weeks and Wednesdays to come, here's some of what the Brattle will be serving up:

Jean Arthur and Charles Boyer in "History is Made at Eight"

Delicatessen (1991)

. It's the carnivores versus the herbivores as a building full of French eccentrics slowly disappear with each new shipment of cold cuts to the butcher shop downstairs. 11/25: 4, 7:50 p.m.

Eating (1991).

Director Henry Jaglom's poignant look at the role food plays in women's relationships to their bodies, themselves, their loves, and their lives. 12/2: 3:30, 7:35 p.m.

My Dinner With Andre (1981)

. Okay, so not much eating takes place during this conversation movie on everything from the sublime to the absurd, but would that we all could have such table talk. 12/2: 5:30, 9:35 p.m.

Raging Bull (1980).

A cautionary tale for the holidays: watch DeNiro as boxer Jake LaMotta inflate to near-Brando proportions. 12/16: 4:30, 9:30 p.m.

Dinner at Eight (1933).

The Barrymores (Lionel and John) join Jean Harlow for glittering New York dining fun. What holiday dinners should be. 12/23: 3:45, 7:45 p.m.

Other "Feast" flicks include The Cook, the Thief, His Wife and Her Lover ("Kind of sexy and sick," says Connie White, co-owner of the Brattle with Mary Ann Lampke), Life Is Sweet (along with Delicatessen, "a totally black comedy about food" says White), and the romantic food comedy, History is Made at Eight.

Flicks In A Flash

Jennifer Eight

"Eight is not Enough"

The premise is intriguing In thls film by British writer/director Bruce Robinson (Withnail and I, How to Get Ahead in Advertising): Los Angeles cop John Berlin (Andy Garcia), burnt-out by his job and a failed marriage, flees to Eureka, California, where his old partner has secured him a job on a small police force. Dead bodies start turning up, and no one believes Berlin when he claims a serial killer is on the loose — and it's possible Berlin could be the killer. The overcomplicated plot, however, unrolls in fits and starts, and everything is presented in a confusing fashion. The ending Is simply a cheat — everything leading up to it comes too slow, and the end comes too quickly. Hitchcock would have been appalled. A.L.

Claire of the Moon

"Women writers in love"

Sex doctor and novelist Noel Benedict (Karen Trumbo) is paired with promiscuous blonde novelist Claire Jabrowski (Trisha Todd) at a women writer's retreat in Oregon. After long discussions and lifestyle clashes, the two women awaken to their love for one another. The movie succeeds when Noel and Claire discuss men, women, intimacy, and sexuality; gradually (arousingly), we follow the two women on their psycho-sexual journey. Unfortunately, writer Nicole Conn provides us with the most annoying batch of secondary character stereotypes imaginable, making some scenes unbearably bad. Claire of the Moon does succeed in delivering a heartfelt look at lesbianism that is ultimately moving. At Coolidge Corner Theater. T.S.L.

The Efficiency Expert

"No Laughs Wasted on This Company"

Anthony Hopkins plays Wallace, a stone-faced consultant who specializes in down-sizing companies, making them efficient and as synchronized as clocks. After walkIng in on the smiling, anclent employees of a moccasin factory and their dingy, inefficient accommodations, Wallace realizes that factory employees are flesh and blood, and should be treated as such. This comic import from Australia is full of endearing characters, evoking the light-hearted eccentricities of the Ealing comedies of the '40s and '50s like Whiskey Galore and The Lavender Hill Mob. An instructive parable, it provides a lesson in humanity for the corporate leaders of today. J.S.

"History 101"

Jeremy Irons plays Tom Crick, whose unconventional method of teaching history charms his stubborn students into accepting the subject and makes him come to terms with his own lurid past. The eponymous Waterland refers to the flat, marshy English countryside of Crick's youth, his formative psyche. It seems to have an almost magical effect on its inhabitants, provoking romance, insanity and murder. In this adaptation of Graham Swift's 1983 novel, director Stephen Gyllenhaal and director of photography Robert Elswit have produced a remarkably cinematic piece of work. The acting is flawless, especially the performances of Irons, Sinead Cusack (who plays his wife) and Ethan Hawke, who plays a precociously cynical student in Crick's class. J.S.

Reservoir Dogs

"A Down and Dirty Escapade"

Reservoir Dogs, the story of a bungled jewelry heist by six independent crooks, acting as a group, Is a forceful, albeit flawed, drama that is not for the weak of heart. Writer/Director Quentin Tarentino delivers dialogue that is crude and rude in Mametian fashion, with a spattering of violence that is visceral and unsettling - as when we see thief Mr. White (Harvey Keitel) shoot two policemen to death through their squad car windshield before they can escape from their safety belts. With characters named Mr. Pink (Steve Buscemi), Mr. White (Keitel) and Mr. Orange (Tim Roth), Reservoir Dogs keeps our attention and interest with its mixture of drama and comedy, and is an admirable debut for Quentin Tarentino. Dracula Scholar Finds Coppola Movie a Little Thin

BY TIM LEMIRE

If you want an expert's opinion on Francis Coppola's Dracula, just ask Professor Raymond McNally: with three non-fiction books on Dracula, the snow-haired Boston College professor of history is internationally recognized as a leading vampire scholar. After seeing the latest account of the Count, McNally gives Coppola guarded praise.

"It's lavish, no doubt," McNally says concedingly, "it's very beautiful, good acting by [Gary] Oldman, with the Lugosi accent. Anthony Hopkins is superb, showing the dark side of Von Helsing. Winona Ryder is over her head; I just can't buy her as a Victorian lady, and the worst performance was Keanu Reeves. He's a hunk — that's it!"

And as to how closely Coppola followed Stoker's novel, McNally remarks, "This movie was not Stoker's Dracula; this was Francis Ford Coppola's Stoker's Dracula." Readers of Stoker's novel, McNally points out, know that the original story is more horrorific than romantic.

To McNally's mind, the best three Dracula movies are Nosferatu (1922), Dracula (the 1931 classic with Bela Lugosi) and The Horror of Dracula (1958, starring Christopher Lee).

"It is in the movies that Dracula achieves his true immortality," says McNally. "As long as there are humans, he will live and be resurrected with new interpretations which are generally all right, as long as one adheres as closely as one can to the spirit of the novel." To McNally, a first step in that direction is to keep Dracula scary, instead of turning him into a Byronic paramour who can surpress his bloodlust for higher love.

Angie Wooldridge

One aspect of Dracula which McNally was glad to see was the connection made between Stoker's character Dracula and the 15th-century Romanian prince, Vlad the Impaler. In his 1972 book In Search of Dracula, McNally and co-author Radu Florescu (a B.C. professor and colleague who claims to be an indirect descendent of Vlad) were the first to establish that Stoker took his inspiration for Dracula from the bloodthirsty prince.

We may be seeing more of Vlad in movies ahead. McNally's second book, Dracula: Prince of Many Faces, which further explores the history and character of Vlad the Impaler, is currently being routed around Hollywood. Coppos Productions of Los Angeles is looking for a strong lead to play the murderous prince. "They're apparently trying to get Willem DaFoe," says McNally. "He's a great actor, I hope he does it."

For a more detailed look into vampire history, check out the following titles from McNally and Florescu: The Complete Dracula (Copley Publishing Group, 1985); Dracula: Prince of Many Faces (Little, Brown, 1989); Dracula Was a Woman (McGraw/Hill, 1985), which is currently out of print but may be available in used book stores; and In Further Search of Dracula, to be released on Halloween 1993 by Houghton Mifflin Company. ❑

The Secret Garden

Golden Optimism Beyond the Footlights

BY NANCY LEONARD

At the Colonial Theatre, The Secret Garden is a strikingly thin but pleasantly engaging musical. It packs little emotional punch, and even the staging includes much obvious filler. But far from being tedious or trying, the evening maintains appeal with its sheer niceness and optimism reaffirming the goodness of life.

Roger Bart and Melody Kay in a scene from "The Secret Garden"

Adapted by Marsha Norman from Frances Hodgson Burnett's classic children's novel, The Secret Garden tells the story of Mary Lennox, an 11 year-old who is sent to live with an uncle in Yorkshire after her parents die in a cholera epidemic in India. Uncle Archibald Craven is still mourning the death of his wife Lily after 10 years, and has conflicting feelings toward his crippled son Colin. Entrusted to the servants, Mary wanders the halls of the haunted Misselthwaite Manor and discovers the secret garden. It blooms again under her attention, restores Colin's health and creates a loving family that can finally move on to the future.

The novel has long appealed to young girls, with its story of female activism and renewal. Mary's own efforts, free of naysaying authority, produce all the happy results. The only unseemly note occurs when Archibald's brother Neville, the dour physician, summons a stuffy headmistress to interview the prospective student. Mary's strident temper tantrum is so at variance with everything else that it seems more undignified than amusing. But it's a reflection of her determination - and it works.

The Yorkshire setting is dotted with ghosts, who move in and out of the action. Some - such as Lily, Mary's parents, and the Indian couple who served the young girl - make dramatic sense, at least some of the time. But the ghosts, it seems, are also used to fill up the space when there's not much else going on. After a while, the symbolism pails, and simply becomes busy work. There's also an odd balance in the storytelling, which unfolds ever so slowly. The narrative brings us to the garden at intermission, but we enter its secret realm only for a moment at the close. The ending, optimistic though it is, is more of a climax than a conclusion. The evening feels emotionally truncated, with some further action needed to make things fully satisfying.

Director Susan H. Schulman keeps a tight grip on the melodrama and sentimentality as moors. Not all the stage business is dramatically purposeful, and some of the mysterious allusions remain obscure, though forward movement generally glosses over the slippery areas.

The production has strengths in its scenic design and its score. Heidi Landesman's Victorian sets never pretend to be realistic, but are marvelously representational. A half-height doll house hanging in space, large-scale filigreed picture frames, a child's bed, and a few elaborately carved tables and chairs stand for the interiors. Potted plants and giant topiary figures enliven the outdoors. The springtime garden beguiles with a golden glow: a cardboard cut-out, three layers deep, framing the action with a busy assortment of cherubs and faces. Tharon Musser's textured lighting (by turns, shadowy and bright) and Theoni V. Aldredge's period costumes enhance the design.

The score - with music by Lucy Simon and lyrics by Ms. Norman - is delicate and pleasing, and often carries the action along in a transitional way. More could be made of some numbers, as only a few are memorable. "Lily's Eyes," "Come to My Garden," and "How Could I Ever Know," all ballads, are the stand-outs.

Melody Kay is strong and appealing as young Mary. She sings well and has remarkable presence. As her uncle, Kevin McGuire has a forceful, dramatic singing voice, and nicely captures the widower's kindness amidst his torment. Douglas Sills, also with a rich voice, makes Neville's manipulations more understandable than villainous. Sean Considine is OK as Colin, but sings weakly. Anne Runolfsson, as Lily, has a clear, high voice of gentle beauty. Tracey Ann Moore's Martha, the Yorkshire maid who is Mary's confidante and guide, was a little indistinct on opening night but irreverently winning. Roger Bart, with a firm pop voice, endows her brother Dickon with rustic charm. Mary Fogarty is good as the old Irish housekeeper. Jay Garner is also good as the faithful old gardener.

The Secret Garden is still attracting audiences in New York. It's hardly a blockbuster musical, but it does have a pleasant appeal. Its visual, musical, and narrative elements cast a golden glow of niceness and optimism beyond the footlights. ❑

George Bernard Shaw's Widowers' Houses runs Oct. 28-Nov. 29. With its theme of slum landlords maneuvering and manipulating to increase their gain, the play presents arguments about the rich and poor, liberal and conservative, and uses the same words heard in political debates today. Also, the Lyric presents A Child's Christmas in Wales, based on the beloved short story by Dylan Thomas, from Dec. 2-23. Call 437-7172 for times and ticket prices.

Mystery Cafe
290 Congress St., Boston
The Mystery Cafe presents Let's Kill the Boss every Thur. at 7:30pm, Fri. at 8pm. Sat. at 6 and 9pm and Sun. at 7pm. Tickets, which include a four course dinner plus the show are $29-$33 and are available at Bostix or by phone at 262-1826.

New Repertory Theatre
54 Lincoln St., Newton Highlands
Operatic passion flare in The Lisbon Traviata, a scathingly funny, deeply moving drama about the wrenching breakup of a gay relationship in Greenwich Village. Runs Nov. 5-Dec. 13; call 332-1646 for times and ticket prices.

Robsham Theater
at Boston College
140 Comm. Ave., Chestnut Hill
The Robsham presents Beckett's brilliant, bitter comedy Waiting for Godot, perhaps the greatest existential play of all time. Shows are Dec. 3-5 at 8pm and Dec. 6 at 2pm. Call 552-4800 for tickets.

Sugan Theatre
at the Black Box Theater
Boston Center for the Arts
539 Tremont St., Boston
The Lament for Arthur Cleary is a contemporary, yet timeless, play about Arthur Cleary, who returns to his native Dublin (after having spent years as an industrial migrant worker in Europe) to find the city engulfed in urban decay and violence. Performances are Dec. 3-6, 10-13, 17-19; tickets are $12. Call 646-5983 for times and reservations.

Terrace Room
Boston Park Plaza Hotel
64 Arlington St., Boston

DINING

The Elephant Walk

Dining at a Great Pace

BY MEG WORDEN AND MARCUS G. APICIUS

It must have happened to you before now: you want to eat out, but there's this problem: one of you wants oriental food and the other doesn't. The solution? A visit to The Elephant Walk.

It's more than a year now since The Elephant Walk arrived in Somerville, breaking new ground with its intriguing combination French-Cambodian menu. It was an immediate hit, garnering critical acclaim from all quarters. A year later, we found ourselves wondering if the restaurant had been able to maintain the quality and variety that brought it so much initial popularity. We got an inkling of the answer when we waited close to an hour for a table on a Sunday evening.

There is, of course, a perfectly logical reason for the oriental and western food combination, and this goes back to the French colonial influence in Cambodia. Longteine de Monterio, chef of this family run restaurant, was brought up in Cambodia, and has cooked French cuisine since her teenage years.

The Elephant Walk is located in the basement of a former police station. Cleverly drawing your attention away from this setting, the owners have introduced features that provide a conversation point. The main dining room has light blue walls broken by a narrow frieze of black elephant silhouettes at the top near the black ceiling. A smaller anteroom has peach walls, an elephant frieze at waist height, a black ceiling with a kind of arbor canopy, ceiling fans and Parisian prints. The elephant theme continues with the cute white elephant-shaped salt and pepper sets. The small waiting area (apparently now converted to additional dining space) has a mural simulating a stone wall in Cambodia, complete with painted-on bullet holes.

You can't go wrong with either the somlah machou or the b'bwaw mouan soups (both $4.95). The former is a kind of hot and sour soup with shrimp, while the latter is a very interesting rice soup incorporating shredded chicken, beansprouts, scallions and fresh cilantro. The last three ingredients were placed on the surface in little mounds, rather than being swirled into the broth, making each mouthful a different (and delicious) experience.

When The Elephant Walk first opened, it made something of a name for itself with its rouleaux (spring rolls, Cambodian version). The menu has now expanded to include several kinds of both Cambodian and Vietnamese spring rolls. We wanted very much to try the assiette de rouleaux, a combination plate providing a sampling of all these, but they are evidently so popular, the restaurant was out of all but the traditional Cambodian rouleaux ($6.50). These were simple, but very good indeed, coming with lettuce, Asian basil, sprouts and tuk trey sauce (made from fish sauce, vinegar, sugar and garlic) for dipping.

Salads stand out here, and once you have tried the salade Cambodgienne ($5.95), you'll find it hard to pass up on future visits. It sounds so ordinary, having a base of shredded cabbage, but just wait until you taste the tantalising hot spices, which dance on the front of your tongue. The other ingredients - shredded carrots, chicken, red peppers, mint, basil, peanuts and tuk trey - combine to provide a harmonious blend of flavors. From the French side of the menu, the outstanding salade au magret de canard fume ($6.50) was some delectable slices of smoked duck that reminded us a little of Canadian bacon, beautifully arranged with strips of endives and slices of melon and peach on a bed of lettuce. The home-made vinaigrette is worthy of special mention. Other salads meriting serious attention are salade aux crevettes chaudes ($6.50) - sautéed shrimp flambeed in aniseed - and the salade Elephant Walk ($5.75) with its pleasing combination of hearts of palm, mushrooms, apples, tomatoes and walnuts.

One of our favorite Cambodian entrees is the very tasty, tangy poulet a la citronelle ($9.95): sautéed pieces of chicken in a nice peanut sauce flavored with lemongrass. On our most recent visit, the kitchen was too overwhelmed by the influx of customers, and on this occasion the chicken was a little tough, though at other times is has been just perfect. Another favorite is the keing sako ($9.95), a bowl of spicy slices of beef in a coconut sauce that also includes tiny little pea sized eggplants. Amok ($10.50), on the other hand, received rave reviews. This is sliced catfish in coconut milk, steamed in a banana leaf cup; the blend of spices used in this dish makes the flavor intriguing and unforgettable.

The Cambodian entrees sound so alluring, it is difficult to even consider the French side of the menu, but to pass it up is a big mistake. Traditional favorites abound, like canard a l'orange, coq au vin, and steak au poivre, and with difficulty, we resisted these and settled for an unforgettable order of raie au beurre noire ($11.95), a classic preparation that rarely appears on menus. Skate is a delicious fish that is undeservedly neglected, and with this dish, the kitchen surpassed itself. The wings were cooked to perfection, sautéed crisp on the outside and tender inside. The butter sauce was excellent, too, though a little more would have been in order.

We have always had mixed reactions to desserts at The Elephant Walk. On our last visit, we loved the beautifully light mango mousse; the profiteroles, too, were fresh and light, but their chocolate sauce was disappointingly thin (we speculated that it was commercially made). Pear tart (a special of the day) had a delicious filling, but the crust was a little heavy and underdone.

There is an excellent selection of beers from around the world, including three in the French de Garde style. The wine list contains a nice mix of French and American at prices to suit all pockets. ❑

Chef of the Month

Joyce Della Chiesa - Chef/Caterer

BY MARGE CHRYSSOSTOMIDIS AND PETER MCNAMARA

Where do jazz greats eat when they come to Boston? The answer can be found at the Della Chiesa residence in Boston's South End, where Joyce Della Chiesa's guests have included Dave McKenna, Dick Johnson, Dizzie Gillespie, Stan Getz and Tony Bennett to name but a few. Luckily for the public at large, Joyce doesn't confine her talents to cooking at home; from time to time she takes over as guest chef at Scullers in the Guest Quarters Hotel, where jazz dinners are a regular feature (she can also be found creating delectable treats at other jazz functions throughout New England).

Joyce's background is half Italian and half Bahamian, which meant that from an early age, she was exposed to an unusual combination of cuisines. Her passion for food led her to the Orson Welles Restaurant where she met Odette Bery, one of the area's most talented chefs. After working together for a year, they found a tiny spot in an unfashionable area of Cambridge and opened the Turtle Cafe on the proverbial shoestring, thus starting the trend that put Inman Square on the culinary map. Between 1971 and 1985 (first with Odette as co-owner, then with Nancy Madden), this fondly remembered "hole-in-the-wall" restaurant provided a place where gourmets on a budget could experience wonderful and innovative food at affordable prices. Back in the early 1970s, the idea of using fresh produce was somewhat revolutionary, and this became a trademark at the Turtle, as was the regular featuring of vegetarian food. Several well known local chefs (including Gordon Hamersley of Hamersley's Bistro and K.T., formerly of The Tam) have passed through the Turtle's kitchen at one time or another.

Eventually, Joyce wanted a change and gave up the Turtle, while retaining the catering side of the business. She also worked part time for a spell at St. Cloud. She finally found a solution that allowed her to both travel and cook, and this was to start a whole new career as guest chef. In between these stints, she is still involved in the catering business (at Jules Catering in Somerville), and with her husband Ron, hosts a radio show - Dining Out With Ron and Joyce, on Saturdays.

JOYCE DELLA CHIESA'S FRESH STRAWBERRIES WITH MARSCAPONE CREAM

(SERVES 10-12)
2 qts fresh strawberries
1 lb marscapone cheese
3/4 cup sugar
1/2 cup Galliano liqueur
3-4 cups heavy cream
Fresh mint sprigs (optional)

Wash, hull and halve strawberries. Whip marscapone in a bowl until smooth. Gradually add sugar. Then very slowly add the Galliano and heavy cream, beating constantly, until the texture is silky smooth. Spoon the cream sauce over the strawberries and decorate with a sprig of fresh mint. ❑

In October, the Della Chiesas led the first of what they hope will be many culinary tours of Italy. For now, Joyce says she is having too much fun to get back into the full-time restaurant business.

Joyce would like to share the following delicious (yet easy to make) dessert with our readers.

Happy Holidays

The holidays are the times for wines! With colder and shorter days, Nouveaus in from Beaujolis and California, we are compelled to rediscover red wines!

Wine Tastings are every Saturday from 4–7 pm.

If you're the guest at holiday parties, remember this—your host probably has fine tuned the whole day. Bring Champagne! Not only do you look cool and make a great impression, but sparkling wine makes a perfect aperitif.

If you're the host this year, remember this—Grace the table or buffet, with both white & red wines. For whites consider a spicy dry Gewürztraminer or Pinot Blanc from Alsace, or maybe a fine Fume-Blanc from California. For reds we suggest Shiraz or Pinot Noir—there are many combos. First rule—drink what you like!

We are now open Sundays up to New Years.

Enjoy—Fennells & Co.

In Vino Veritas

Turkey vs. Wine Taste Off Or, Which Wine Shall We Ruin This Year, Honey?

BY JONATHON ALSOP

Thanksgiving dinner is notoriously tough to match up with wine, and I think it's the fault of the meal AS A WHOLE. Hyper-cooked turkey with stuffing mush, baked yam mush, mashed potato mush, a batch of droopy green beans and a big old scoop of gravy topped off with that bitter cranberry guck that makes me think of King Crimson's "Lark Tongue in Aspic." Yuck! NOTHING sounds good with Thanksgiving dinner! And it's not the turkey's fault. It's the meal's form and consistency, and those damn cranberries that make it so anti-wine.

Emotionally, the event is vinous contradictory, from the "America's Puritan Past" angle right through Norman Rockwell's wine-free Thanksgiving icon. When I visualize it and say, "Well, here's dinner! Want a glass of wine?" and normally, I look forward to answering "Yes! Love one!" but I reply with a sheepish "No, not really," you know something's very wrong.

Many thanks to Ian White and Marty's in Allston for the following assortment of capable All-Americans. Tasted blind with cafeteria-style turkey & stuffing, i.e. worst-case scenario.

'91 Pine Ridge Chenin Blanc ($7) Sweet, almost citrusy tropical fruit flavors. Some spiciness. A good match with 10% alcohol for people who like to take it easy in every way.

'91 Fetzer Sundial Chardonnay ($6) The control sample. Very bright, very sunny, in its own world compared with the ponderous feasting. Not a match, but a real crowd-pleaser nonetheless.

'90 Carmenet Napa Valley Colombard — Cyril Saviez Vineyard ($9) Either a bad bottle or the strangest wine ever. Interesting aromas gave way to repulsive flavors of baby aspirin, Pepto-Bismol, and something else my mom made me take on a regular basis whenever I was sick. Woof.

NV Westport Rivers Evensong ($7) Another bad bottle. As soon as we opened it, it foamed up like sasperilla. Previous bottles have been very good.

'91 Saintsbury Carneros Vin Gris of Pinot Noir ($9) Promising at first, ultimately killed by the "meal," and all in all, a good pink match with turkey if you just decide to surrender.

'90 Mountain View Vintners Pinot Noir ($7.50) Strong flavors, dark red, easy to drink with a nice black pepper aftertaste. A match.

'90 Preston Vineyards Faux-Castel Rouge ($10) Great earthy aromas and flavors, big and overpowering, strong tannin, hot spicy finish. A match and my own personal favorite, but I would never serve it to a crowd. Too powerful. Blew the turkey completely out of the room.

'90 Ravenswood Vintners Blend Zinfandel ($8) The winner. A wonderful wine and a great value. Excellent deep fruit flavors. Cinnamon, clove and allspice. A long creamy finish. One of the best Zinfandels I've ever tasted.

My conclusion is somewhat fatalistic. The Pinot Noir was the only wine that even came close to matching up with the turkey, and it wasn't all that close. If you're serving a traditional Thanksgiving dinner, you would have to change the structure and feel of the whole thing before you could successfully put wine with it, and you know that's not going to happen. My advice: forget about matching up wine. It's a losing proposition. Either serve up an assortment of Nouveau or break out your most favorite wines, keep them AWAY from the cranberries, and do your level best to enjoy.

"BEAUJOLAIS NOUVEAU WATCH"

Putting a new twist on something that's already new is tough, but Terrazze della Luna has done it with an excellent Italian Vino Novello made from the Teroldego grape. The Novello will run as a special on Paparazzi's wine list as long as it lasts, maybe through Christmas. Retail at Upper Falls and Marty's in Newton, and the Wine Cask in Somerville. A very good buy at around $6 or $7, and like the Californians, a new angle.

Bouchard, Drouhin and the humongous DuBoef comprise the French contingent. Fruity, juicy, spicy, maybe. It's hard to get excited about $9 French Nouveau this year when top-drawer Beaujolais from '91 and '90 (between $6 and $9 all over town) is cheaper AND better than any Nouveau there ever was. People love Nouveau, and it is fun wine, but it's got what they call "negative QPR," for quality-price ratio. I'm down to about two or three bottles a year just for the high-priced giggles. ❑

It's the season for giving, and you can help a good cause by attending the forthcoming Charbaut champagne dinner at Watertown's On the Square on December 8. Proceeds will benefit the Dana Farber Cancer Institute. For information, call 923-1522.

New in The North

A wonderful new Italian food store just opened up in the North End. It's the Salumeria Toscana, at 272 Hanover Street. The window display is impressive, and you'll love the sight of all the sausages suspended from the ceiling. Three kinds of prosciutto are currently in stock, including one from Parma. Olives are sold from the barrel, and include varieties from Gaeta, Kalamata and Nice; you'll also find capers in salt - a very hard-to-find commodity. Mozzarella is made on the premises daily, and there is a selection of other cheeses from Italy and France. You will also find sundried tomatoes in oil, fresh chestnuts, fresh home-made pasta, a good selection of olive oils, and Bindi brand desserts flown in from Italy.

New Menus Around Town

Daddy-O's in Cambridge (tel. 354-8371) is simultaneously celebrating its first anniversary and introducing their Fall/Winter menu. Expect to find hearty dishes like shrimp and corn dodgers, golden cod cakes, pan-roasted chicken breast with fennel, pears and hard cider and a grilled sausage plate comprising chorizo, garlic-tasso and venison...At Michela's (tel. 225-2121), chef Jody Adams is featuring food from the Abruzzi, Molises and Marches regions of Italy. Some typical dishes include wild mushroom sformato, an appetizer version of tornedo alla Rossini, pizza topped with figs, tallegio cheese and sage, and pan roasted quail on polenta with pistachios and pomegranates...At Rowes Wharf Restaurant (tel. 439-3995), executive chef Daniel Bruce's fall menu tempts us with an autumn vegetable soup with toasted walnuts and cheddar cheese, maple roasted Vermont pheasant, and a dessert comprising vanilla mousse-filled puff pastry garnished with poached cranberries and ground cherries, served with vanilla sauce and cranberry coulis.

A Mexican Miracle

We have always been fans of chef Danny Wisel, and were intrigued to hear that he is now cooking traditional Mexican and Southwestern food at the recently opened Armadillo Cafe in Allston (tel. 232-4242). The menu is unusual, and everything we have tried to date is absolutely delicious. Worthy of mention are the margarita marinated shrimp, the pozole (a hearty stew of goat, duck and rabbit) and the veal and smoked pork meatballs, while the grilled trout (flavored with spices combined with lime zest) is outstanding.

Restaurant Openings:

Skipjack's has opened a Harvard Square branch at 5 Bennett Street, tel. 876-9900. The chef is non other than Billy Rodden, who delighted us with his talented cuisine at Casa Romero and the Cafe Suisse...The popular Bluestone Bistro has plans to open their branch at 480 Columbus Avenue, Boston, tel. 536-9331 before this month is out...Another opening scheduled for late November is Foster's Bar and Grill, located in the Cambridge Holiday Inn. Described as a "Bistro with a Boston accent", the menu will include gourmet pizzas, pastas and grilled items...Mary's Bar and Isabella's Restaurant at 111 Dartmouth Street, Boston is aiming for a November 23 opening. The regal name is a bit of a mouthful, but the idea is to have two operations under one roof. Chef Steven Beadles is rumored to cook a mean saigon ravioli, and has a number of other interesting and eclectic specialties up his sleeve.

People in the News

Congratulations to James Whong on his promotion to Executive Chef at Cherrystone's...Michael Neagle, long considered a fixture at the Ritz-Carlton Hotel, has been appointed Director of Function Sales at the Bay Tower Room....Meanwhile, at the Colonnade Hotel, there are major changes in the kitchen. Welcome to Charles A. Grandon who was recently appointed Executive Chef; he is a graduate of the Culinary Institute of America (CIA), and has over 10 years of professional experience. Jean-Pierre H. Debeuf, formerly Sous Chef at the hotel's Cafe Promenade and a graduate of Culinary Arts School in Thonon les Bains, France, has been promoted to Executive Sous Chef, while Edward L. Doyle, also a graduate of the CIA, has been appointed Sous Chef.

The Juicy Details

We hear that the owner of Jae's is hoping to open a restaurant in Cambridge. We also hear that a place called Sab's Grill and Sushi will be opening soon in Cambridge. Could there be a connection here? Rebecca Caras reputedly has her eye on the Holyoke Center area in Harvard Square as the site for a new restaurant...The very popular Redbones has found a new, 150 capacity location (still in Davis Square). No information yet as to the proposed moving date...Jim Liftan, co-owner of the Cactus Club is rumored to be looking at a Watertown location for the site of his planned new Italian restaurant, to be called Porcini's...Look for a new restaurant and jazz club at 297 Franklin Street, Boston. It is being opened by the owners of Trattoria Il Panino (winner of the Improper Bostonian's Best Italian Restaurant Award); the name has yet to be revealed...Peppercorn's in Cambridge is now owned by Anthony Fonseca; there are plans to change both the name and the menu; we'll keep you informed...Thornton's Fenway Grill will be opening soon on the site of the late Sibel's, which closed recently...Another recent closure is that of Il Dolce Momento on Charles Street...We heard on the grapevine that the Boston chapter of Les Amis du Vin may soon be resurrected. Stay tuned for further details. ❑

RETURN TO SENDER, CHANGE OF STYLE

Boston's Letters to Cleo find Life Through Variety

BY DAVID FENIGSOHN

Letters to Cleo are a band known for change. In the two years that the five-piece Boston band has been playing together, they've changed personnel, recently adding drummer Abe Laberiel. They've changed styles, often from song to song, from danceable pop to aggressive hard rock. And they've changed from playing the opening slot on Tuesday nights to headlining Boston's best clubs on weekends.

"I think we are slowly growing up," said bassist Greg Karp. "If you listen to our older material and our newer stuff, there is definitely a difference. There is still a little bit of eclecticism, but our sound is becoming more focused. Our sound is getting deeper, heavier and now has a darker edge to it."

Karp and Laberiel back up the dual guitars of Greg McKenna and Michael Einstein, who fuel the band's material. Whether the band is playing the quiet, melodic "Sister" or tearing through "Rimshack," Einstein's leads and McKenna's steady rhythm work are key to their combinations.

But the center of attention is usually on vocalist Kay Hanley, whose confident voice is in the forefront of the mix. She is equally adept at belting out a rocker as she is singing quietly over an acoustic guitar. Given the pop feel to some of the band's material, it is surprising that they have not received more attention.

But recognition is on the way. Letters to Cleo were recently voted First Runners Up for Best New Artist in the Phoenix/WFNX Music Poll. Hanley was also voted Second Runner Up for Best Female Vocalist. They also had a strong showing at The WBCN Rock and Roll Rumble, finishing as semi-finalists. "Finishing in the top three of the WFNX Poll was a pleasant surprise," said Hanley. "The thing about that was, at the time, we were still playing third slot on Friday and Saturday nights. We were happy with the music, but no one had heard us. And the Poll sort of got us there. Plus, it was right around the time of the Rumble, so it started this momentum for us. You can't buy that kind of momentum. It was good for us."

The band has also attracted the attention of Budweiser, who gave them a corporate sponsorship. "They pay for some advertising, but it's a very laid back relationship," explained Karp. "We don't ask a lot and they don't give a lot. It's not like we sold our soul to a corporation."

Letters to Cleo are now making plans to return to the studio for the follow-up to their independently released debut Sister. "We have about six songs that are ready to be recorded," said McKenna. "Then we have some new stuff that we are still developing. We all contribute musically."

"My lyrics make no sense to anybody but me," commented Hanley. "I don't address any social or political issues, and if I did, you wouldn't know it. Half the time I don't even know what I'm saying."

Live, Letters to Cleo are tight and at ease. Hanley jokes with the audience, and the band improvises jams not included in the studio versions. "On the tapes, [the songs] sounded very flat and very demo-ish. It used to be that you had to see us live. But now with the addition of Abe, the energy comes through."

For now, Letters to Cleo will continue to play on a regular basis, enjoying making music for their steadily increasing number of fans. "We just want to keep on doing what we're doing. We'll play the majority of our gigs in New England, occasionally going down to New York or Philadelphia. Just playing away, rehearsing and doing a couple of gigs a week," said McKenna.

"We do our showcases, and if anybody shows up, great. And if nobody shows up, that's fine too," added Laberiel. "We have a good time playing and that's the bottom line." ❑

DYING TO BE A BOSTONIAN

David J. Plans to Move to Boston

BY REY ROLDAN

"I think about death quite a lot," admits David J. "I've been attracted to [the darker side of human nature] for as long as I remember." He pauses. "But I can be fun as well."

For David J., the darker side of human nature was not so much a preoccupation as it was an obsession. Bauhaus, whose fondness for the lower octave drove them to pen such classics as "Terror Couple Kill Colonel," "Who Killed Mr. Moonlight?" and their signature "Bela Lugosi's Dead," existed on negative emotions which fueled the fire that ultimately consumed them. "There was a hell of a lot of friction in that band," he explains. "We were all aware that it was a big part of what made it work. But it kept on building up. When we were ready to record our fourth record, Peter [Murphy, vocalist] became ill. With his blessing, the three of us [guitarist Daniel Ash, drummer Kevin Haskins and David J.] used the studio to start recording with the idea that he'd add his vocals later. We found that it was a lot less tense with the three of us. And when Pete came back, Danny and I had already layed down the vocals so Peter's [vocals] would sound redundant. So we started talking about going our separate ways. That was the genesis of Love & Rockets."

While Murphy wallowed in the intellectual art rock of Dali's Car and his subsequent solo career, Love & Rockets lifted the pallor in which Bauhaus had swathed itself and found a quirky pop machine hidden beneath. Scoring alternative hits with "Ball of Confusion," "No New Tale to Tell" and the crossover smash "So Alive," they nurtured the band's aesthetic qualities while simultaneously pursuing solo careers.

David J. admits that presently "Love & Rockets are on the backburner" while they all tend to their own material. [David J.'s new disc Urban Urbane (MCA) has recently hit the racks]. "We didn't want a new Love & Rockets album to clash with our solo releases," he mentions. [The new album is completed but will not be released till late next year].

Meanwhile, David J. is avidly searching for residency in the area. "I'm thinking of moving toward Cambridge," he muses. "I have family and a lot of friends who live there and I like the defined seasons. In America, there's a buoyancy and generosity of spirit that I find most attractive. Whereas here [in England], there's also a meanness of spirit that I detest."

While he may be looking forward to starting anew as a Boston native, he doesn't entirely rule out a Bauhaus reunion. "If we ever did do a reunion, we had better come up with new material that is at least as good as the best of the old stuff [i.e. Mask, Bela Lugosi's Dead], not going out and playing the old numbers, like some cabaret thing," he laughs. "That would be pitiful." ❑

Smokin' With Judy Jones

Pipes Release Debut CD and Search for a Deal

BY DAVID FENIGSOHN

"We want to get a record deal. We know we're going to get screwed no matter what. It's inevitable. So we're trying to find a deal that gets us screwed the least," said singer/lyricist Jeff Robbins of the Boston band Pipes. "We don't want to end up like Boston band X, who hold out and finally sign a deal. And then the band gets dropped because the label can't keep up."

Pipes, a foursome who have been playing in Boston for about two years, will release their first full-length CD Judy Jones on the small, newly established Boston label Permagrin Records at the end of this month. The release is their third, following a pair of independently released E.P.'s, The Toes on Your Feet and Swirl.

Robbins is joined by Steven Running on omnipresent guitar that fills the band's sound. On the quasi-punk songs like "All at Once" and "Again," his driving guitar fuels the band's aggressive live shows. While on the poppier "Nancy" or "Judy Jones," his atmospheric leads set the band's distinct style. Bassist Michael LaRoche and drummer Steven Brown Nasi are the solid, tight rhythm section, proving that Pipes' music is danceable as well.

Pipes' new material is more consolidated than previous efforts. "The new songs are the result of a more concentrated effort and represent a more personal statement. As we're getting to know each other's styles, we're gelling," said LaRoche.

"We're getting angrier too," added Robbins.

"I wouldn't say that this album is the result of anger," countered Running. "Our songwriting has turned into more of an organic thing, and if something turns out angrier, it's our [decision] to leave it that way. But at no point did we set out to make angrier songs. . . I think aggressive is a better word than angry."

After originally attempting to record Judy Jones at a large, professional studio in Boston (they stopped after "very bad experiences" there), they returned to the Room Nine from Outer Space, where they recorded The Toes on Your Feet. "The great thing about recording at [Room Nine] is it's like someone's basement," explained Robbins. "The ceiling is dripping, equipment is stacked all over and [there's] a little teeny control room. But it's great. We really work well there."

Pipes will be supporting the new release with frequent gigs in Boston, headlining such venues as The Paradise, Man Ray and Venus de Milo. The college circuit has also been a popular spot for them. Last year, they played a showcase gig at the National Association of College Activities in addition to numerous local school shows. "We're hoping for a lot of repeat shows from the schools we played last year," said Robbins.

"At least at the schools where we didn't offend anyone," the remaining band members chorused, but declined to elaborate.

"We love the college shows because they're like, 'Okay, we want you to play for four hours,' and we get to do all our songs," said Robbins. "And we get to play loud." ❑

Album Reviews

Absolute
"Houdini's Mirror"
Mondo-V

What this album speaks of most is reminiscing. At first, it recalls Peter Gabriel around the time of his self-titled albums, and then about eleven tracks later - it's Squeeze. But in reality, the album is just a compilation of good songs from the band's six previous EP's which have managed, for the most part, to go unnoticed in the Boston area. It sounds simple, but on Houdini's Mirror, there's a larger concept at work.

The title track, drawn from 1991's Every Tongue in Town, is based on a short story by lead vocalist Drew Allison that relates a brief tale about a mysterious mirror that forces a distraught husband to witness his wife's infidelities. Combined with the song's additional lyrics, it's a story of love, loss and hurt. It's a subject matter that helps to hold the album together and although the theme has been quite well established in pop/alternative music, at least these guys are attempting a different approach.

Standout songs on this well-produced album (the band members must have great day jobs) are hard to single out since they all have something worthwhile to offer. The nature of a compilation like this produces several obvious seams, but as a whole, Houdini's Mirror serves as a great catch-up for those who sadly missed Absolute the first time around.

-Sander Wolf

Boston Symphony Orchestra
Charles Munch, Conductor
"Debussy: Le Martyre de Saint Sebastien; Iberia"
RCA

After its premiere in 1911, Debussy's Le Martyre de Saint Sebastien was stigmatized as scandalous and sacreligious by the archbishop of Paris who objected to its androgynous representation of the saint. Debussy cast Sebastian, and the other principal roles for women's voices and the choreography by Ida Rubinstein and Michel Fokine followed suit, calling for a female dancer to portray Sebastian in a manner that was labeled seductive. The orchestral fragments from this oratorio are heard with some frequency, but the entire score has inexplicably suffered undue neglect. On this recording, dating from 1956, Florence Kopleff, Catherine Akos and Phyllis Curtin assume the solo roles and Charles Munch serves as the narrator for the spoken segments. Le Martyre de Saint Sebastien is unquestionably a masterpiece and is essential listening for anyone with a serious interest in 20th century music. For many, the Munch years were a golden age in the Boston Symphony's history. These performances amply bear that out. Unreservedly recommended.

-Steven D. Brown

Swirlies
"What to Do About Them"
Taang!

Swirlies weave sweetened, crunchy power pop with hands which pray to Sonic Youth. Swirlies are from Boston, and that alone gives them reason to be hailed. Another reason is that What to Do About Them, their debut mini-LP, isn't pop, isn't alternative, ain't Godiva, but it's homemade rock candy - wicked sweet an' rough around the edges. "Sarah Sitting," "Her Life of Artistic Freedom" and "Didn't Understand" show the love vantage point put forth by moaningly cryptic vocals. Lyrics are longing and truthful in a Lemonheads sort of way, and tracks like "Tall Ships" use male and female harmonies to sucrose-up the raw sound. Magic lies in the guitar feedback whirls; the "Tall Ships" riff is mixed with bleeding wahwah, screwing into a fully unique sound. Drums are light and basic, and the scratchy scream-sing vocals donate a rugged edge. The overall relaxed, jangly recording is charmingly care-free.

-George Poulos

The Shivers
"Disciple of Love"
Big Noise

and other clubs around Boston, the true heart of their music lies in their Flesh for Lulu/Godfather's-tainted original rock. This four song EP reveals the creativity that lurks beneath the covers. "Stranger's Faces" glides along a groove that's slightly reminiscent of Peter Gabriel's "Shock the Monkey" but lacks the urgency. Jerry Read's emotive vocals wanders the fine line between passion and restraint, keeping the tension building, ultimately giving way to his guitar flourishes. Lead guitarist Rick Davy adrenaline-fueled licks pump the soaring "Freedom's Calling" while drummer Gary Taylor and bassist Greg Silva's rhythm work keep it steady. The only thing missing from this EP is the song that borne the title which was the focus of recent demos. Disciple of Love still cranks out the goods, leaving you drenched in a cold sweat. (The Shivers, 4 Company Street, Warren, RI 02885, 401-245-9437)

-Rey Roldan

Wrecking Crew
"Identity"
DEMO

As hardcore's funeral continues and heavy metal rises like a phoenix, Wrecking Crew take hardcore pace down a notch to weld a threatening four song demo. A revamped beat allows some solos and more rhythm, while speed still creeps in to stabilize. "Identity" is an outright metal track that bleeds excessive rhythm and choral blasts. "Thousand Yard Stare" picks up the pace to provide more of a power punch than a slow grind. "Oblivion" leads in gradually, then kicks into quickened hardcore speed spackled with shards of mosh groove. "Passing Time" finishes the tape keeping rapid time, intermittently diving into thick hooks. All provide ample shades of lyrical darkness. The metallized hardcore sound blazes a power path full of wide gashes left by a double-dose of metal and hardcore proficiency. The timing and rhythm weighs the East Coast down.

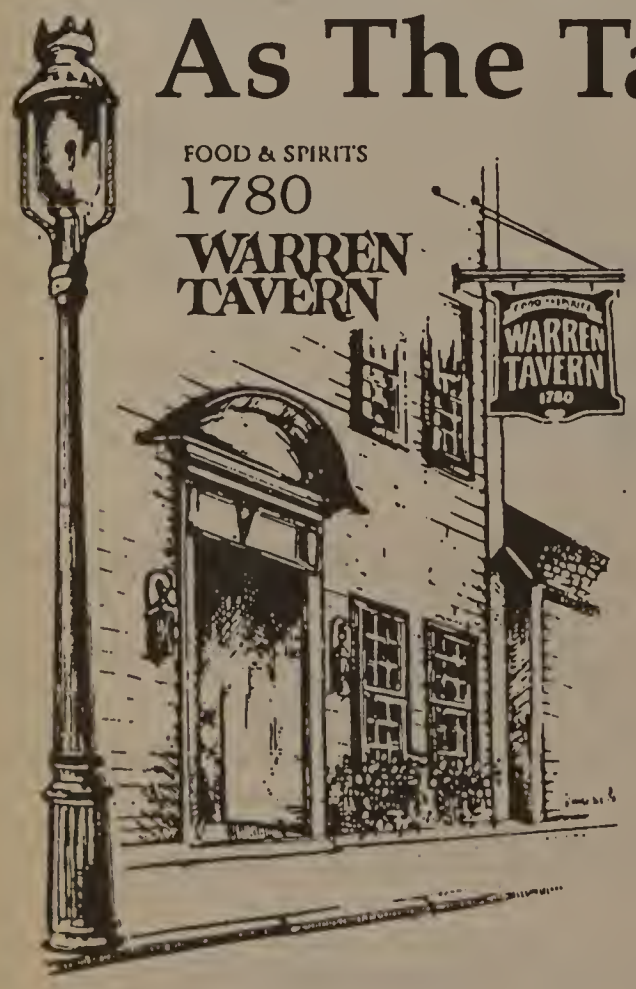
Hardrock's Thank You To Boston Rocks Party

This Round's On the House

BY LAUREN DARE

Four hours of open bar and a lot of guys who looked like Joey Ramone. There. I just summed up my whole evening at the Hardrock's party to thank Boston bands (thank them for what, I don't know). Just kidding. Actually it was a great evening; as I said, FOUR HOURS of open bar - I mean, right there you have one of the key ingredients for a great bash. You know the Hardrock took a beating on this one, too, because a lot of the guests looked like they hadn't been out of their apartments in months, much less seen a live beer, and they sure weren't about to let this opportunity slide by. Also, there was a phenomenal buffet table with everything from roast beef and ribs to petits fours and chocolate dipped strawberries. After I had plowed through the food, I almost bust a seam on my little black dress, but I somehow managed to hoist myself back up on my barstool for a few more Absolut and tonics. The bar staff was cruelly overworked but they did a great job and managed to be friendly at the same time.

Aside from the free food and free booze (as if you need anything more), and the background jamming of the guests, the Hardrock also offered - oooh - celebrities!! Robert Parish was by far the tallest, Livingston Taylor was the baldest, and everyone else, including members of Aerosmith and Extreme, who were allegedly there, even though I never had the pleasure, still looked like Joey Ramone to me. Sorry guys. I kept my eyes open for the New Kids on the Block, but since they have become invisible to members of the media, I couldn't find them. The one I really wanted to see was Marky Mark and his Funky Stomach, I mean, Bunch. Actually, I just wanted him to show me his abdominals, but I guess he couldn't make it; probably off shooting another commercial in his underwear.



Well, by the time I was on my fourth Absolut and tonic, I decided to buy drinks for everybody in the house, and told the bartender (who looked kind of like Bruce Springstein - maybe this is a prerequisite for working in the Hardrock: you have to look like a rock star) to get my friends whatever they wanted - on me. Ha Ha, it's easy to be generous when you know there's no tab, but I thought this might help make up for every other night when everybody has to buy me drinks.

When I fought my way downstairs to the loo, I realized that the bar wasn't the hottest spot to be. For some reason, everybody was grouped into that little 10'x10' space outside of the bathrooms - and they weren't waiting to use the toilets. This was apparently where all the action was taking place, although the type of action was difficult to identify. In any case, when I made it into the Ladies Room, I was kind of, you might say, plastered, and I didn't even notice if there were condom machines because I was too busy trying to straighten the seams in my stockings without running them. Elvira was standing next to me putting on her lipstick and I asked her if she got her hair done at Amour de Chien (which is where I get my dog groomed) but she didn't get it. I stumbled my way back upstairs and thought I'd run into a pillar that hadn't been there when I left, when I realized it was Robert Parrish making his escape. This suddenly seemed like a good idea to me, too, especially since when I got back to the bar, it was last call, and I discovered that one of the guys I had been talking to was actually wearing more makeup than I was. Not that I have anything against this, but picture the scene the next morning - whose mascara smudges would be bigger?

It was a great party, and I have to say "Thanks" to the Hardrock for their incredible generosity and devotion to the cause of having a good time. If only they would do this every Monday night and give me someplace to go. If anyone has any suggestions for Monday night hotspots, please let me know. Oooh, and by the way, Kevin Dillard, ESQ. - thanks for your steamy letter and I'll give you a hint: Sunday the 29th I think I'll be in the mood for a Lansdowne Street Reggae jam. See you there? ❑

•ALLSTON SPORTS DEPOT 783-2300, 353 Cambridge St., Allston. With 2 satellite dishes and over 20 TV sets, this may be the best place to catch a game outside of Fenway or the Garden. No cover and no dress code. Just a plethora of sports fans chatting and arguing about, what else, sports over beers, appetizers and killer burgers. .

•ARBUCKLES 782-9508, 1249 Comm. Ave, Brighton. Situated between BU and BC, Arbuckles attracts an even mix of students from both schools and anyone else in search of good food and drink at a good price. 20 oz. drafts for $2!!! The dress is always casual but the atmosphere ranges from mellow and relaxing to noisy and boisterous.

•AVALON 262-2424, 15 Lansdowne St., Bos Boogie to Hip Hop, Funk, House, Progressive and Top 40 music at this colossal dance club. Music varies nightly. Take advantage of the enormous dance floor, placid lounge, and intimate booths. Avalon also boasts having the best light show in town. The crowd here is a good mix; anyone in the mood for dancing should feel comfortable. Cover charge varies. Dressy slacks, collared shirts, and dark dress shoes required. Great place to see live shows. Sun. night is gay night.

•AVENUE C 423-3832, 5 Boylston Pl., Bos A chichi dance club located in the Theatre District across from the Common. Inside you'll find a mix of young professionals who arrive to meet, mix, mate, or just dance up a storm. Cover charge increases after 10 pm, so arrive early. No jeans or collarless shirts. Progressive music Fri. & Sat. nights.

•BILL'S BAR 421-9678, Lansdowne St., Boston. Located in the midst of Lansdowne St., Bill's can be a great alternative to the dance clubs. It caters to a crowd consisting anywhere from punk to preppie. Bill's reputedly has the best jukebox in the city, programed by Peter Wolf. It's loud, clean and showcases live music occasionally. Casual and very relaxed.

•BLACK GOOSE 617-720-4500, 21 Beacon St., Boston. A relaxed jazz club situated a stones throw from the Statehouse. Sit back and enjoy superb live jazz at its best. It's casual, unassuming and you don't have to wear an I love jazz attitude on your sleeve. No cover. Live piano music Monday through Friday from 5-7.

•BLACK ROSE 742-2286, 160 State St., Bos Live, traditional Irish music 7 days and an atmosphere that thrives on patron participation characterize this Faneuil Hall bar whose name is a symbol of Irish Catholic repression by the British. The food is home spun and the beer, well Irish. The upbeat crowd is composed of students, professionals, locals etc. and they all get involved in the show. Beware, people will know your status by stealing a glance at your claddagh ring! Moderate cover weekends. Casual dress.

•BOSTON BEACH CLUB 227-9664, 300 Faneuil Hall Mktpl., Bos A strong seaside theme prevails. Surfboard tables, plastic sharks, tropical drinks and a guy next to you wearing a Hawaiian shirt adorned with a few dozen neon leis. Live entertainment entertainment nightly from Rock to Reggae and Blues.. There is a small dance floor for those who like to bop.

•BULL & FINCH PUB (CHEERS) 227-8665, 84 Beacon St., Bos A recent study confirmed what many Bostonians have assumed for years, The Bull & Finch actually attracts more tourists than most of the sights on the Freedom trail! The TV show Cheers uses the doorway of the Bull & Finch for their opening shot, but nothing else. Still, it offers a comfortable and boisterous neighborhood atmosphere. Try it at least once. No cover. Casual dress.

•CITYSIDE AT THE CIRCLE 1960 Beacon St., Brookline 566-1002. A great place to relax and meet friends while watching your favorite sporting event. Stop by and pay us a visit.Conveniently located at the last stop on the C line, across from the Circle Cinema.

•CLARKE'S 227-7800, 21 Merchant's Row, Bos Located just outside of Faneuil Hall, this is a popular meeting place for Boston singles and college students. Clarke's has that old fashioned saloon appeal that makes it easier to let your guard down. Expect a line on weekends. No cover. Casual dress. Full menu in the restaurant.

•COMMONWEALTH BREWING COMPANY 523-8383, 138 Portland St., Bos "Let no man thirst for lack of real ale" is the motto at this microbrewery and restaurant featuring glass walls so thirsty patrons can longingly observe the brewing process. The decor consists of copper tables, pipes and beer tanks. Approximately 10 English ales are served on tap as well as "Boston Burton Ale" served frosty cold in the bottle. Close proximity to the Boston Garden translates to before and after game crowds. Live Reggae and Calypso every Friday and Saturday Nite 9:30 to 1:00. Brewery tours are free, but sorry, this isn't the Molson factory. No samples. $3 Cover. Have dinner here and no cover.

•COTTONWOOD CAFE 661-7440, 1815 Mass. Ave., Bos Open daily for lunch and dinner, this casual yet upscale cafe makes you feel like you've landed in the heart of Arizona. The southwestern cuisine (try the grilled specials) is complemented by the adobe booths and multitude of cacti. Relax in the outdoor cafe during the hot summer months.

•CROSSROADS 262-7371, 195 Beacon Street, Boston. Hailed as one of the last neighborhood pubs in Back Bay, this casual hotspot is frequented by locals, students and young professionals. Among its many attractions are three dart boards, cable sports, a loud jukebox and Guiness on tap. Open 7 days a week 'til 2.

•DAISY BUCHANAN'S 247-8516, 242 Newbury St., Bos This Newbury St. late night hot spot packs up consistently with singles on the make. A dark and noisy place, where at least one anonymous source has protested the lack of condom dispensers at the bar. More action as the night wears on, this is a great place to be for last call. No cover. Casual dress.

•FROGG LANE BAR & GRILL 720-0610, 245 Faneuil Hall Mktpl., Bos At this large Faneuil Hall patio bar, the crowd is a mix of tourists and locals. Lofted above the crowd in Faneuil Hall, Frogg Lane offers a mixed menu of American and Mexican fare. No cover or dress code. Jukebox for indoor entertainment.

•GREEN BRIAR 789-4100, 304 306 Washington St., Brighton. This neighborhood Irish pub in the heart of Washington Square has the best combination of the Celtic feel far from the parking mess of Government Center. Entertainment ranges from Irish music to the occasional progressive band. The crowd is a healthy mix of neighborhood folk and recent college graduates. Modest cover on weekends. Casual dress.

•HARPER'S FERRY 254-9743, 158 Brighton Ave., Allston. Perhaps Boston's best known R & B bar, Harpers offers live music nightly. Most of the bands are top local blues acts, but on Sun. the amateurs take over with open mike night. Smoky but lots of fun with darts and billiards and a large dance floor. Moderate cover varies depending on the act. Collared shirts are required.

•LENOX PUB & GRILLE 536-5300, 710 Boylston St., Bos Enjoy casual dining and an extensive array of imported and domestic beers in an authentic British pub. Attracts an older, quieter crowd. No cover. Neat dress. Sun. brunch 11:30am-2:30pm.

•LILY'S 720-5580, 101 S. Market Faneuil Hall Mktpl., Bos The tourists have found a good deal at this cafe/piano bar where one can sample quality cheap eats and listen to piano Fri.-Sat. nights. No cover or dress code.

•THE LITTLEST BAR 523-9766, 47 Province, Boston. Located near Downtown Crossing. A quick walk from the Orpheum Theatre. As its name implies, The Littlest Bar is quite little. In fact, the place only seats 17 people. Guinness and Rolling Rock are among the beers served on tap. Edibles also served. Hours are from 8:30am-12am Weekdays and Saturdays.

•LUCKY JOHNNY'S 731-6753, 1098 Comm. Ave., Boston. Classic Rock rhythms fill the air at this upbeat college bar frequented mostly by BU, BC and Pine Manor students. On weekends, it gets pretty crowded. So beat the lines and get there early. The barback grill is always open and the smaller underground lounge is a nice place to chat. Dress is a relaxed casual to somewhat dressy. Best of all, there's never a cover.

•MARKETPLACE CAFE 227-9660, 300 Faneuil Hall Mkt., Boston. In a comfortable, relaxed area in Faneuil Hall, sit back and listen to the great sounds of the Brian Walkley Band with special guest Bruce Bartlett every Thursday at 8:30pm. "Street Magic" acapella every Wednesday at at 8:30. Casual atmosphere and dress.

•NIGHTSTAGE 497-8200, 823 Main St., Camb An intimate, well laid out club with a seating capacity of just 250. National and well known local acts. Blues, Rock, Zydeco, Jazz, Folk and Country are propelled by a sound system that will blast you comfortably to the outer limits of space and back. One of Boston's best up-close-and-personal clubs. Casual dress. Call Ticketron 931-2000 for ticket info.

•PARADISE ROCK CLUB 254-2052, 967 Comm. Ave., Bos One of Boston's best live clubs. Inside, you'll find one of the last of the small stages which still attracts national and international acts. Cover varies from moderate to heavy. Dress is casual. Dancing on non-band nights. For show tickets, call Ticketmaster at 931-2000. Minimum age varies by show. .

•PERRY'S 367-1297, 199 State St., Boston. Upstairs young professionals follow their favorite teams on six TV screens. While downstairs, college students and young professionals dance the night away Wed.-Sat. Located in the Faneuil Hall area, the dress is casual and the popcorn is excellent! Lunch and dinner served 11:30am-11pm.

•PURPLE SHAMROCK 227-2060, 1 Union St., Bos An Irish bar with a touch of Faneuil Hall. Entertainment alternates between traditional Irish music and DJ dance music. Giant-screen TV. Moderate cover varies. Casual dress. Full menu.

•RATHSKELLER 536-2750, 526 Comm. Ave., Kenmore Sq., Bos Affectionately known as the Rat, this is a rock club with staying power. Past headliners have included the Police, 10,000 Maniacs and R.E.M. The Rat attracts a hardcore alternative crowd - lots of black clothes and biker jackets. No cover upstairs. Varies downstairs. No dress code. .

•RYLE'S JAZZ CLUB 876-9330, 212 Hampshire St., Camb If you're a Jazz fan, don't miss Ryles. Downstairs you'll find an older crowd listening to traditional Jazz music. Upstairs is funkier with talented fusion musicians. Feel free to move between floors. Cover varies from moderate to heavy. Casual dress.

•SCULLERS LOUNGE 783-0811, 400 Soldiers Field Rd., Camb Renowned Jazz singers entertain here nightly. The bar is well stocked, the chairs are comfortable and the walls are paneled, evoking a mellow mood. The nighttime view of the Charles adds an air of romance. Heavy cover. Casual dress but no jeans or sneakers.

•T'S PUB 254-0807, 973 Comm. Ave., Boston. Great food, lively atmosphere and there's always something going on inside. Younger bar-hoppers beware: Only Valid ID's accepted (they're really tough!). Lunches and dinners are delicious and reasonably priced. College and thirtysomething crowd. Never a cover but always a good time.

•THE BARMUDA TRIANGLE 437-1011, 200 Brookline Avenue, Boston. Located just outside of Kenmore Square. The Triangle features live music seven nights a week. Catch Boston's best Jazz early in the week, and kick up your heels to Latin, R&B, Reggae and Rock through the weekends. Full bar. Reasonable entertainment charge after 9:30. Weekly giveaways include free passes, round trip tickets to Bermuda, T-shirts, parties and more! .

•WALLY'S 424-1408, 427 Mass. Ave., Bos Treat yourself to unadulterated Jazz nightly at Wally's. Neatly tucked away on Mass. Ave. not far from Northeastern U., Wally's is easy to miss. The only indication that you've arrived is a small white beer sign out front. The atmosphere is dark, smoky and crowded and above all authentic. Mon. is Blues night. No cover. Casual dress. Arrive early to get a seat.

•WARREN TAVERN 241-8142, 2 Pleasant St., Boston. A funky little bar whose clientele includes young professionals athletes. Reputedly having some of the most beautiful women in Boston. The bar now attracts mainly athletes.Stars don't mind hanging out at the tavern because no one bothers them. TV is always on for sports. No tank tops. Bring I.D. Please don't drink and drive.

•WESTERN FRONT 492-7772, 343 Western Ave., Camb A multicultural Reggae and Jazz bar where it's difficult not to get caught up in the rasta spirit. It's dark and dingy inside, but the place sparks alive when the bands take the stage. Cover varies from moderate to heavy. On Sunday nights, visit the Arts Café and enjoy music, comedy, performance art and poetry for only $5. Casual dress.

WANTED:

Men with overwhelming memories of a traumatic experience.

The Trauma Clinic at the Massachusetts General Hospital is studying an FDA approved medication which helps people who find it difficult to put traumatic events out of their minds. Eligible volunteers will be treated for 13 weeks, free of charge, with either a placebo or medication. If you are interested, please complete the following checklist:

- ❑ I have nightmares about and flashbacks to the events
- ❑ I have a difficult time putting the events out of my mind
- ❑ I am often irritable and I startle very easily
- ❑ I am afraid much of the time
- ❑ I do not get pleasure out of the things I used to enjoy
- ❑ I feel distant and cut off from others
- ❑ I have trouble with anger

If you have checked three or more, please call the Trauma Clinic at:
617-727-5500 ext 946 (And ask for Mike.)

Best of all they're FREE! Send your Impersonals to us at Improper Impersonals, The Improper Bostonian, 17 Station St., Suite 7A, Brookline, MA 02146. Or fax it to us at 232-4305.

HHF,
Maybe if you cleaned up your place and your act, maybe then we'd do nice things for you. -
The Man with The Foot in his Ass

To the streetwalker on the corner of Tremont and Causeway (at 2am),
Nice badge, nice ass (and nice bust).
The gentleman who just wanted to have fun.

Larry,
Thanks for being such an understanding son of a bitch. As just another of Boston's grand slum lords, you'd be better off picking crap out of your teeth. Stay away from our building and we'll stay away from your pets.
HP

M&D,
Was breakfast as enjoyable as the late-night drunken revelry?
Conscientious Observer

To the flock,
OOOOOH, why are you so far away from me? I miss running, skipping and hopping with all of you. It's just not fair.
OOOOOOOH

Bug,
You can't move to Austin, you're going to leave me hostile and horny. As it is now, every time you go to Texas, my left hand won't speak to my right hand for days.
Sniff.

Woof*

*Curtis the Poodle would like to wish our readers a Happy Thanksgiving.

Michelle,
My, you are a witch! The next time you have car trouble and need a hand to help - call someone who cares. I don't mind being a friend but don't try to seduce me with the "friend in need" scenario. Try something a little more subtle, like ramming a dildo into me when I'm looking the other way.
Your Ex-roomy

What did the Zenmaster say to the hot dog vendor?
Make me one with everything.

K., I go to the BHP every night now, searching in vain for that sexy Cuervo smile and those big blue/green eyes, but all I see is a field of drunk people. Where are you? The hill is only alive with the sound of music that beats from my heart when you are around.
Love PD
p.s. Bert and Ernie are psyched to party with you on Friday, especially after seeing you in that shirt

To the Molester,
I've sent out bulletins to all the local police forces about your pending descent into the elementary school community. Give me a call if you need a hand autographing any lunch boxes. Little Katey says that "Daddy and Mommy say it o.k. if uncle Jon walk me home from school as long as we stay on the road (and not the woods)."
Red and Blue

Juicy Brucy,
Your candidate lost, Hurrah, Hurrah. You remind me more of Dan Quayle in your golden red locks. Get a haircut and then try getting a life. You're a bigger a__hole than you can imagine.
Your Neighbor

Mister Newbury Street Store Manager,
Just because some people wear alternative clothing and prefer to dress in black leather coats, pants and boots doesn't make them a threat to society. We're nice people too, and we have feelings just like everyone else. Think about that the next time someone isn't allowed in your store because of what they're wearing. Be a little sensitive. And if you treat me like that again, I'll cram a f___ing x-mas tree down your throat, you lousy piece of shit.
Sensitive Sam

Laddies,
All I can say is that since we've returned from our journey to Ireland, I continue to see that old bugger on every street corner. And what's up with the juice?
Roberto,

Thank you for not forcibly raping me in your apartment the other night. Date rape by getting your friends to hallucinate that you are a large pickle is so much more considerate and sensitive. Call me when you decide to become a large poodle.
Aimee

To My Hairy Little Porpoise,
Our swim in the wetness of your passion fruit made me want to throw in my flippers and throw on a few scales. If you're free tomorrow, I'll be the naughty little princess and you can be the big, bad Torture king and give me the punishment that I know I deserve.
Trisha

To the white girl with the kinky hair,
If you didn't want to be treated like a dog, why'd you pee on my rug?
Los Cojones grande

Patty,
Since you left me
You got hefty
Rolls of fat everywhere
Now I'm healthy
Also Wealthy
And no more crabbies in my Hair
-Devil Dog

ZS,
The material was fine, The ink was good. Don't forget that rambling along the coastline in a beetle is better than cruising the alleys with a stiffy. Lots of luck,
Trent

Lori,
Why didn't you come out in the rain to play with me last night. I figured that with all the rain, wind and lightning that you'd be all set for some playtime. What's Wrong?Chicken
Little

Philbo,
Your turn is 287 days overdue. This means that the Enforcer will have to punish you. First he'll make you drink the red stuff, then he'll drop THE OBJECT on your head and finally he'll leave you to the mercy of Madeline Z. Better book that ticket to Alto Ubica before he catches up to you.. - Fnord

Kirsten,
Thanks for never calling me. I'll give you one more chance. Meet me back at the Beacon Hill Pub this weekend, but this time, try not to be so bombed on Tequila. Maybe we can talk. I'm definitely the kind of guy who would bring you out to a nice dinner and a show. I heard that the meat loaf sandwich at Buzzy's roast beef is really good.
P.D.

CINNABARS

Imbued with the cinnamony scent of the season, this little shop of charming gifts and amusing little browsables will send you home with an armful of Christmas presents. Cinnabars is full of things from around the world, and for all ages, on the whimsical side of useful. Take the everlasting-wick lamps that blaze in a puddle of red or green lamp oil, or the lamp with a glass lampshade embedded with stones and shells that glows warmly. Or the nicely-made wooden toys that update children's games (paddle balls, jacks) to adult sizes. Comic and useful are the teddy-bear alarm clocks that announce "Hey Baby, Wake Up !" or give out a bugle call. Plump, smiling Russian-lady dolls double as tea cosies or muffin warmers. And there's jewelry, some of a rather old-fashioned silvery style, some copper and brass, and other pieces that delicately assemble bundles of recycled glass. For Kwanzaa, an African-American celebration that celebrates strength and vitality, there are bold, colorful cards; an array of arty or comic (Far Side, for example) cards and postcards are even more prominent at non-Christmas. They sell fat, free-standing candles, and little bibs for kids with a tiny teddy tucked in the pocket. A local artist offers little mirrors edged with glittery baubles. There are colorful funny T-shirts for kids, and black ones with make-them-think slogans ("No child is born a racist," or "US out of my uterus,") whose designer won a Human Rights Award. In other words, gifts of conscience or whimsy make good bedfellows here. Often under $20.

GET TOGETHER, GUYS!

This game is a cornucopia (and also a goldmine)! It's a resource book packaged as a set of cards in a big box (350 of them), for "Games, Energizers and Challenges to ignite your playful spirit." In the spirit of non-competitive new games, and sometimes borrowing from well-known ones, the games are categorized by colored tabs into such things as "Words, Tales and Numbers," "Thrills and Skills," "Cooperative Group Games," "Relays and Tag," "Sound And Movement," etc. with choices of high, semi and low-active ones. Activities that are the group-building backbone of camp, of family gatherings looking for the ice-breaking alarm-clock of connection, and indeed any gathering, multigenerational or not. Circle games in which people run in opposite directions, saying "Ooh" going one way and "Ahh" going the other (then exchanging sounds when they meet), are hysterical ways of warming up the group. Games that make you guess, creatively and collectively, are here in abundance. The sources of these inventive builders of connection and competence include theater games, the circus, experiential human potential movement ones, and kindergarten - as they say - for all ages.

The Gift Of Thrift

One present that won't turn up on your Master Card bill is the one you can give yourself throughout the year - namely the habit of thrift. Here are a few ways you can save money by not spending (much of) it: PREPAY: Your Globe bill, a year in advance (it's also a kick to pay for news that hasn't been written, or even made yet) and save 10%. Ditto for the drycleaners, some of whom give a discount for prepayment. JOIN: The Y and use its health club facilities for far less than the fancy spandex spots. RIP UP (or HIDE FROM YOURSELF) that credit card. DISCOVER: The things that can best be cooked with over-the-hill vegetables (the famous Garbage Soup is one; so is Banana Bread) and buy that sorry-looking but useful produce. BORROW: Books, and even magazines from the library (or from your dentist's office!) GO: To the movies in the afternoon. GET: Some friends together and get Group Sales at expensive plays. SIT: In the cheapest seats and move forward during intermission. SELL: Healthy clothes you no longer wear to vintage stores. BUY: A lot of discounted Christmas things right after the holidays. SHARE: The purchase of some in-bulk buys with a friend. CUT: Store coupons and have them guide your shopping. GIVE: Yourself a certain amount of cash at the beginning of the week and spend only that much. WANT: Less!

6 Single for The Season

Who cares if you have a loved one with whom you can spend all of your holiday events ? Who needs it? Hope is not lost if you're single through this holiday time - as a matter of fact, you may be better off. Hear tales of woe and tales of triumph as you join some of Boston's other third wheels during this time of romance and coupledom.

7 Eighteen Holes Under One Roof

Indoor golf in Boston? You bet. Since its appearance in 1916, miniature golf has delighted millions of people who are forced to retire during the cold months. Read how Boston's first indoor miniature golf course and restaurant - The Golf Club and DogLeg Kitchen and Bar - marks the latest in late night trends.

AROUND TOWN

If you can avoid falling in front of a cab, being mugged and getting pushed onto the T tracks long enough to make it over to the Carpenter Center at Harvard University, you'll join others like yourself by participating in the Cultural Survival's Holiday Bazaar. From December 11-13, Cultural Survival will once again offer indigenous arts and crafts from around the world to holiday shoppers. But this Bazaar is different from most. This year, crafts like ikats and batiks from Flores, Indonesia, small items from Australia's outback and baskets from the Marshall Items will be available for purchasing. Live West African music will be performed throughout. The bazaar is part of an international effort to help indigenous peoples and threatened societies avoid extinction and retain their rights and cultures as they adapt to the modern world. Times are Friday from 4-8 p.m., Saturday from 10 a.m.-8 p.m. and Sunday from 12-6 p.m.

Bugs Bunny would love this guy. Carrot Top, whose been called the "hottest young comic in America," appears at the Faneuil Hall Comedy Connection on Friday, December 11. With a show that consists of four travel trunks overflowing with bits and pieces of everyday life, Carrot Top delivers prop-generated humor in a circus-like atmosphere that has wowed audiences for three years. His appearances on Comic Strip Live, The Sunday Comics, Evening at The Improv and MTV's Half Hour Comedy Hour have shown millions of Americans just how truly warped our world can be, if you think about it. He also holds the record for the most college appearances ever contracted. Tickets are $12.50, with shows at 8 p.m. and 10:15 p.m. Call 248-9700 for reservations.

Mark your calendar if you're not sure what to do on New Year's Eve, as First Night Inc. continues their tradition in entertaining excellence with First Night 1993. This year's event features special performances and installations incorporating environmental themes such as recycling and endangered species. Executive and Artistic Director Zeren Earls says that First Night 1993 combines art with environmental awareness to educate as well as entertain the public. With over 1,000 artists in over 150 performances and installations which include classical, folk and new music, magic and juggling, First Night 1993 should once again be a great kick-off to the new year. Buttons are $7 in advance and $10 after December and can be purchased at Au Bon Pain, CVS, Star Market and Store 24 among others.

Landing at the Hasty Pudding Theatre on December 8, 1992, and staying through January 3, 1993 are The Flying Karamazov Brothers. Performing in an all new holiday show called Juggle and Hyde, the brothers promise to delight anyone daring enough to witness their gravity-defying juggling feats. Combining juggling with music, humor, acting and vaudeville, these flying lunatics return to Boston to juggle a potpourri of items, which in the past have included anything from bowling balls and pepperoni pizza to dirty diapers and lobster. Shows begin Tuesdays to Saturdays at 8 p.m. (Sat. matinee at 2 p.m.) and Sundays at 7 p.m. (Matinee at 3 p.m.). Tickets are $18-$30 and can be purchased at The Hasty Pudding Box Office at 12 Holyoke Street in Harvard Square or by calling 496-8400.

How many artists do you know that perform in three places in one day? For the Boston-based Chamber Repertory Theatre, performing under such grueling demands is a piece of cake. On December 21, they'll bring three of their national touring productions to town. The productions feature staged dramatizations of famous stories and authors. Each production (Encore!!, Quartet! and Tour De Force!) tells five different stories which are sure to amuse and entertain audiences of all ages. From Poe and Hawthorne to Bierce and Washington Irving, the Theatre's work can be seen at the following times: Quartet! at the John Hancock Hall at 10:30 a.m.; Tour De Force at New England Life Hall at 10 a.m.; Encore!! at the Berklee Performing Arts Center at 10:30 a.m. Tickets are $9.25 and are available by calling 542-9155.

SINGLE FOR THE SEASON

Being single during the Holiday Season can be one of the more depressing parts of life. All around you, ordinary people have become joined at the hip to attain perfect pairhood. Incandescant couples enjoy the seasons as only duos can. You slink home every night to your dark smelly pad to watch Seinfeld with your roommates' mangy cat. At least you have company, although the fact that your roommate has just hooked up with that ideal individual does tend to spoil the pleasure of the company you get from the hissing beast and its fleas. At least you're in Boston, not New York. At least there is beer. At least you aren't hopelessly pathetic...you don't think....

The Improper Bostonian understands. Most of us are single also, but we have each other to tell us that no, we aren't even slightly pathetic. We like being single. Really. There are huge advantages to being single, and great things to do during the holidays when you are unencumbered, independent and free of that old demon love, thank God. Here are some of our best suggestions Who knows, if enough single people are out having fun, they might just meet each other in time to make Valentine's Day something other than the annual Wearing O' the Black.

It's the holiday season. A time to rejoice, a time to reflect and a time to share. Many people have a special someone with whom they can share their happiness, but others - the single people - are alone. Sure, they have friends, but this is a time of year when events in the city appear to be tailored toward couples - not singles. And now, you're swamped in the only season not developed by Mother Nature, but by people.

It's a horrible season. Everywhere you look, you'll see happy couples. With holiday celebrations, The Nutcracker, walks through the Public Gardens, ice skating and other romantic activities, the season can be a very happy time. For them. But for the single person, it's a lonely time. Very lonely.

This is the suicide season. Though crying seems to be a fairly prevalent theme running through this happy time (at least for singles), like magic, your world will be transformed from a miserable, lonely existence to one of self-reveling happiness. No more fantasies of your own death. No more sleeping pills. It's time to take the necessary steps that will keep you functioning through the first of the year.

This is a survival guide of sorts. Something to refer to between now and New Year's Day. If taken to heart, the single person will be guaranteed to survive this uninvited onslaught of good cheer and happiness.

So what can you do?

Start by asking yourself, "Why am I unhappy?" If it's because you feel out of touch with real Americans, then maybe you should give of yourself. Volunteer at a food shelter or Meals on Wheels. Or bake holiday cookies for the poor, or elderly. It's your chance to say how much you appreciate having them in the world and your life. And if you have any leftover dough, make cookies in the shape of a couple whose legs are shackled together. You could give them to your friends who no longer socialize with you unless they're "together as one."

Throw a Christmas party and go caroling afterwards. Whether or not your married friends tagged along, it would at least give you the chance to tell children that Santa Claus is just a farce. A lie.

While reminding yourself that this whole, horrible mess will soon be over, you may want to do something just for yourself, like impersonate a Salvation Army Santa Claus. It's a quick way to earn some spending cash and with the weight of some of those Santa suits, maybe even burn off extra calories.

Take the money earned from your hard work and enjoy The Flying Karamazov Brothers at the Hasty Pudding Theatre. You'll be in Harvard Square, and in a perfect position to witness people even more miserable than yourself - the couples caught in mutual shopping misery. If you're with a friend, you can make fun of them and laugh at their pathetic need for a human crutch. But you'll be happy. Remember, this is about you - not them. Most of them are already happy. The goal here is to increase the magnitude of your own happiness while realizing the full potential and significance of being single. If your happiness happens to arrive at the expense of other happier couples, that's o.k. Remind yourself of the times when your unhappiness came as a result of the sheer ignorance of your "coupled" friends.

But if you thrive on the "Third Wheel Syndrome," then start an advanced communication network. Call your friends and explain to them that you have nothing to do for Christmas, and that your family has died. Ask them to invite you to every event on their social calendar. If it's successful, the "sympathy ploy" will serve you well enough to buy your own social calendar.

The sympathy route can also be taken in other directions.

If you really want to exert the effort, time and money on finding a mate or partner by the end of the season, go alone to a bar and tell a fellow patron

IMPROPER SUGGESTIONS A QUICK LIST OF

Make holiday cards instead of buying the cheesy ones. This way, you can personalize the card for the person, as well as exercise your creative side.

Buy used CDs. No-one will give you these, and you can't give them as gifts, so you might as well buy them for yourself.

Bake fruitcake. Make a lot, and give it to everyone you know, or meet (hi, nice to meet you, have a fruitcake.)

Go on a Christmas Pub Crawl—how many cups of eggnog can you consume in an evening of boozing?

Remember the hellish holiday period you spent with a love object. Wasn't it the worst meeting their parents! their siblings? their exes, with whom they had remained BEST friends?

Have your fortune told. Concentrate on the wonderful things in store, and consider that you undoubtedly have a better future than the present— and the present is nearly the past.

THE GOLF CLUB

Ah, mini golf. A romantic date when you were fourteen—or a raucous afternoon with your middle-school friends. Who can forget locking braces while the windmill batted your ball into your kneesfor the fifth straight time? And remember when your best friend got sick from the Dairy Queen onion rings and barfed down the clown's leg? Ah, the pleasures of youth, so soon forgotten, pushed into the dim recesses of embarrassed memory. Of course, nothing is forever, and besides, nobody who worked at that mini golf course is likely to beat the Golf Club watching for you. So you can try it again, and hopefully better the 172 you got last time.

Kevin Troy and Steven Foster, along with Foster's wife, Gillian, have taken their love and knowledge of Boston and used it to launch a that your spouse has just died. Then, sit back and wait for the drinks. If this experiment is successful, you'll feel confident enough to try another one. You'll also feel extremely drunk.

If you're truly insensitive and so desperate that you'll prey only on the vulnerable, attend an alien-abductee support group meeting and see if you can get lucky. If you don't, at least you'll feel lucky enough to have your sanity. As for pride, forget it. Shelf it until January.

Maybe a trip will help you to forget about life. Join a dating service to see if there's a potential match for you, but if that fails, hop a plane to Jamaica or anywhere else with a reputation as a singles' paradise.

Entertainment is important for the single person during the holiday season as well. You can pick from holiday movies, comedy shows, concerts, plays and more. Call one of your close single pals - it doesn't matter what their gender is - and attend one of these events. If you're with a single friend, the burden of couplemania will surely be reduced. After attending one of these shows, take your single friend and pretend that you're a couple. If this doesn't work, start a "Third-Wheel" sympathy group. You may find that attendance at your meetings will be enough to keep you busy for quite some time. And if not, keep yourself busy at work. Remember, your career is more important than anything else in life, so it's o.k. to bury yourself in the office.

K-9, starring Jim Belushi. It's a great film about a man whose only friend is his dog, and it just goes to prove once again that not everyone needs a partner. But if you're in the video store, avoid any temptations to rent any of the following films (they're pro-couple and misleading): Love Story, Dying Young, Pretty Woman, Moonstruck, Cousins. One film that ranks high on the "must rent" scale is The Lonely Guy, starring Steve Martin. While you're avoiding some of these films, don't forget to avoid happy people (this suggestion may force you to leave the country or Chelsea).

Creative types may want to purchase a his and her voodoo doll set, dress them up like your friends and have a blast with the pins. An especially effective torture is to light the doll's pants on fire. Speaking of fire, if you own a fireplace, pull out that book you've been waiting to read, spark up a fire and forget about your problems. And if you get hungry later on, go to the supermarket and stand by the turkeys and weep. You may meet someone special.

The choices are endless. Whether you spend your savings asking 900-number chat like groupies to invite you to their homes or simply choose to drink heavily, at least you will be making a deliberate decision to entertain yourself. Just don't entertain yourself with the radio. Listen to tapes or CD's, but do not, under any circumstance, listen to the radio. During "the season," DJ's will play happy Christmas songs number of successful Boston night spots. Their partnership began with spin-off, the former indoor roller-skating club that Foster owned and Troy managed. Since those days, the two have created Jillian's, Boston's first billiards club, and Marais and Esme, the restaurant and club that have become one of Boston's hottest spots.

Now, Troy and Foster have created yet another addition to Boston nightlife, The Golf Club and DogLeg Kitchen & Bar, situated beneath Jillian's on the corner of Ipswich and Lansdowne streets.

While the idea of an outdoor miniature golf club seems random at first, Foster and Troy have a method to their madness. Troy comments, "we have always looked for an interactive type of entertainment versus something passive, like going to the movies or something that discourages conversation, like dance clubs." Like Jillian's, The Golf Club is a great choice for people who want to go out, not just hang out. Foster adds that when thinking of an idea for a club, they like to go back to the twenties, the era before television and large-scale films, and see what was popular then - both billiards and mini-golf were - and then modernize for today.

The Golf Club has certainly reinvented the idea of miniature golf. Gone

THE CARDS FATE IS IN

BY GARY S. KADET

The magic of the Tarot can be used for many things, not the least of which is Searching for Love. While we may not understand how this all works (why not just use a couple of decks of beer-sticky Candyland cards, you may ask), first-time users of the Tarot are usually stunned by its accuracy. Plus, remember you used to ask the Ouija board who you were going to marry, didn't you? Remember how it spelled out "HAHAHA"? Hasn't that been an accurate assessment of your romantic life? 'Nuff said. Give it a shot.

"The origin of this pack of cards is very obscure," wrote Aleister Crowley, a ceremonial magician and creator of the Thoth Tarot, who back in the twenties proclaimed himself "The Great Beast." Some authorities seek to put it back to the Egyptian Mysteries: others try to bring it forward as late as the fifteenth or even sixteenth centuries.

And in Cambridge, Jennifer Moore is bringing the Tarot forward into the 21st century. When she's not giving readings, or conducting Seminars on how to read what's in the cards, she is, like Crowley, creating a deck of her own.

"I've been reading cards for about 11 years and have been stunned at how accurate they are," says Moore, who is found most afternoons giving readings at her Central Square studio, "but I cannot honestly tell you why pieces of cardboard somehow do this. I have my own personal theory that there is more to heaven and earth than is contained in your philosophy. Horatio. I feel like there is some unexplainable stuff, but there are a few other forces at work too. There's 500 years of information, in terms of the experience of what the cards represent."

An artist trained at the School of the Museum of Fine Arts, Moore employs a mixture of masks, body painting and set design to create highly dramatic tableaux photographs. Her magnum opus and current work in progress is the marshaling of 78 of these photographs into "The Healing Tarot," her own tarot deck and the first to use photographs for illustration. Half finished at this point, a sampling from the deck titled "The Great Ones of the Tarot" has been shown at the San Francisco Bay Area Tarot Symposium, the Whole Health Expo In Boston, and was exhibited for a special showing at the local hot spot Man Ray.

I'm also doing the "Magic of the Tarot," a Yuletide Tarot intensive at Fantasia in Marlborough on December 13," she adds. "I pretty much use my deck in presentations and seminars, like this and 'Seek the Wisdom - the Intuitive Path,' which is a closed class I'm in the process of doing now."

Finished cards from "The Healing Tarot" will be shown at the Ethericon in New York in January where Moore will narrate a slideshow of her work.

"I've been a visual artist since about the age of two, and I was always fascinated by fairy tales and mystical things," says Moore about her unique marriage of fine art and tarot. "Anything that was magical or mystical, like the brothers Grimm, I liked. Cicely Mary Baker's fairy books were special favorites of mine - she illustrated these beautiful fower fairy books in the 1920s. My mother and grandmother both read me stories about fairies and mermaids and things. So, my natural leaning was toward art and things that are magical. And I've always been inclined to play with pretty pictures."

Though unabashedly spiritual (she is also a practicing witch), Moore's attitude toward Tarot and the mystical is also refreshingly down to earth. "The first time I ever heard of tarot was in that James Bond movie Live and Let Die. I was incredibly curious about anything that had to do with the occult and the paranormal. In my travels and poring over books in the Winchester public library, where I'm from, I found books about the tarot. And that was my first inclination toward it. Then, when I was 18, I had my cards read for the first time, by someone named Jennifer."

Though it initially began as a hobby and a means of supporting Moore and her art, tarot grew into something of even greater importance.

"I was doing a lot of tableaux photography," Moore goes on to say, citing Cindy Sherman, Robert Mapplethorpe and turn of the century photographer Julia Margaret Cameron. "I was reading cards for people but I wasn't merging the two." They finally met four years ago when Moore took a trip to the international tarot symposium in Los Angles, sponsored by Newcastle

Contributors to this stunning article number in the thousands. We all know who we are. However, those who did so today include David Louie, Suzanne Schantz, Allison Begner (who wrote everything which appears in italics), and Tobin Streett. Remember, it is a conscious choice to be single. If you really want to, you can always find someone to swill beer and eggnog with, but not necessarily someone worth a blood test. THE GOLF CLUB, CONTINUED are the days of faddish, cheap or cheesy props and gimmicks; no windmills or clowns for this place. Neither Troy nor Foster wanted a romper room atmosphere. Instead, they have created a classic, "natural" setting. Once you enter The Golf Club, you'll have left the urban dreck and entered a fantasy Bermuda or Pine Hurst. This writer has never played golf, but after wandering through the DogLeg Bar and coming upon the expanse of rock, greenery, flowers and waterfalls, there was an overwhelming urge to scream "Fore!"

Yes, the "natural" setting is fake, but it's not tacky or plastic either. You'll find anything from cat tails to poppies to ivy, depending on the hole. One touch that is not faux however, is the water flowing down the mountains of rock. Troy and Foster say that many people who were shooting pool in Jillian's or just walking by, tried to sneak a peek at the course before the club's opening. The course is challenging. Troy says most people will not shoot below a 50 on their first try. Each hole conveniently has a rack to hold your beer as you attempt your hole-in-one.

The DogLeg Bar & Kitchen complement the course. The forest green walls and dark wood bar and tables give it a slightly country club feel. There are even small statues of a cocker spaniel and fox behind the bar. The DogLeg isn't too upscale though. Foster emphasizes that while everything was done impeccably, there is still an air of "tongue in cheek" about the place.

The beer selection is decidedly serious, however. On draught, you can get Bud, Lite, Bass, and if you're feeling adventurous, DogLeg Draught. A huge mug goes for $4.99. In bottles, the selection includes Rolling Rock, Killian's Red, Corona Extra, Molson, Sam Adams and O'Doul's (for those who don't want to compromise their putting prowess). Pitchers of Sangria and a variety of wines are available as well, but no liquor as of yet. The food is good too as the kitchen offers 20 kinds of pizza, from vegetarian to spicy seafood, to Peking duck, calzones and salads.

Foster and Troy are pretty sure The Golf Club, with its modernized rendition of classic miniature golf is the only one of its kind in the world, and both are excited about its entrance into the Boston scene. As Foster says, the space is beautiful and all, but "having it enjoyed by people is what gives it its heartbeat." Judging from the success of the past Foster/Troy endeavors, The Golf Club should have a strong, steady pulse.

"It was coo-ool" she says. "That was where everything started to fall together for me. I brought a portfolio of illustrations and photographs of 21 masks of holidays and goddesses, and went around asking everybody to look at my work, saying that I'd be interested in illustrating a deck for somebody. One-person looked at my photographs and said, 'You know - you should make tarot masks.' I kind of thought 'nice idea,' but I was really burned out, so I put it on hold. What I realized was that I was limiting myself by thinking about doing a deck, and I realized that, for myself, I was going to need to do many decks in my life."

Moore flew back to Boston and showed some of her masks at "The Pumpkin Lady's Ball" at Man Ray. "Kathleen Chapin and Paula Swilling of Legs Dance company asked me to design masks of the greater trumps that come into my mind."

COMEDY

A Christmas Comedy Feast

Dreaming of "The Other White Christmas"

BY KATHY MATHESON

Yes, those are sausage links on the Christmas tree. (The photo - look at the photo). But what else would you expect from a sketch comedy troupe called The Other White Meat? Well, welcome to The Other White Christmas, a special holiday show that's probably not for the whole family.

"It's definitely on-the-edge," said cast member Betsy Salkind. "It's stuff you'd never get to see on TV - maybe cable, but not TV."

Written, performed, produced and directed by the cast, the show is split into two parts: the first half features monologues, sketches and musical pieces, while the second part is a one-act play that parodies Dickens' classic tale A Christmas Carol. This satirical piece also incorporates elements of the Nativity, It's a Wonderful Life, O. Henry's story Gift of the Magi and many other holiday traditions.

"This is a very unconventional parody of A Christmas Carol," said TOWM member and producer Scott Stiffler. Since every network sitcom creates its own version of the Ebenezer Scrooge story for the holiday season, Stiffler said, TOWM decided to write a production that satirizes the satires on TV.

The cast includes improv, stand-up and sketch actors, but they have all worked together before as members of the Boston improv troupe Guilty Children. "We've had a lot of stage time together," said Stiffler. Beside Salkind and Stiffler, White Meaters include Max Burbank (Guilty Children), Deb Doetzer (Shear Madness), Dorothy Dwyer (Women on the Edge) and special guest Jason Blanche. The performance also has musical accompaniment provided by a band that includes Woody Giessmann, former drummer of the Del Fuegos.

So the big decision this Christmas doesn't have to be between a new tie or a kumquat peeler; rather, it should be whether you settle for a lukewarm rehashing of A Christmas Carol on TV or if you decide to go boldly where few comedy fans have gone before: sketch comedy.

"It's a pretty unique product," explained Salkind, adding that the sketch format "is very character-driven" and provides a way for comedians to get back to their "uncensored creative roots." With sketch comedy, she said, "you can do things you can't do on TV - we don't have to meet sponsors' approval."

In fact, The Other White Christmas is commercial-free. Six actors, 90 minutes, 100 characters - what a deal! From Tues-Thu, you can enjoy a truly original holiday show for only $1.66 an actor, 11 cents a minute (cheaper than AT&T, MCI and Sprint) and 10 cents a character. Fri-Sun, the entertainment is only slightly higher at $2 an actor, 30 cents a minute and 12 cents per character.

For non-math majors, here's a translation: The Other White Meat performs original comedy material Dec. 15-20 at the Back Alley Theater, Inman Square (corner of Cambridge & Prospect streets), Cambridge. Tues-Thu tickets are $10; Fri-Sun tickets are $12. All shows are at 8pm.

Bon appétit. ❑

DRACULA

"Anemic and Unquenching"

Francis Ford Coppola's Dracula, while lushly painted, is anemic. By turning Bram Stoker's vampire into a lover, Coppola has endowed the Count with passion but made him impotent of horror, despite Gary Oldman's superb performance. Winona Ryder (Mina) and Keanu Reeves (Jonathan Harking) provide teen star value; the roles of a Victorian couple are over their heads, and discovering their motivation for their actions is as arduous a task as finding the Count's secret resting place. Anthony Hopkins as Dr. Von Helsing exhibits how to bring imagination and dash to a character, but neither he nor Oldman can give an undead movie life. It's is all Coppola's show, directing for directing's sake, more often obvious and unexciting than the contrary. T.S.L.

GLENGARRY GLEN ROSS

"Lethal Barrage of Words"

This excellent cinematic adaptation of David Mamet's 1984 Pulitzer Prize-winning play loses none of the original's brutal power. It centers on four salesmen (superbly played by Jack Lemmon, Al Pacino, Ed Harris and Alan Arkin) who sell worthless real estate. When the jobs of two are threatened and their valuable customer leads are stolen, their survival instincts go into overdrive. Mamet's jeering, nonsermonizing screenplay is a lethal barrage of words, whose target is free enterprise, American-style. Every character is depraved, and although the salesmen-protagonists are hucksters, Mamet has less antipathy toward them than toward the other principals. One of the most strangely telling scenes has Jack Lemmon smoothly conveying the details of a close to an engrossed Al Pacino. J.S.

UNDER SIEGE

"A Blank Slate"

Ruthless terrorists take over a battleship, and only one man can stop them. . . . Steven Seagal makes a solid attempt to join the A-list of Hollywood action heroes in this big-budget thriller, which plays lot like a horizontal Die Hard, only not as good. It is, however, Seagal's best movie to date, with enough violent deaths and explosions to keep things moving along, although the outcome is never in doubt. Movies of this type are really only as good as their bad guys, and Tommy Lee Jones and Gary Busey, two erstwhile Oscar nominees, are more than adequate for the task - they have enough bad skin and big teeth between them to equip three terrorists. Both overact a bit, but it's a refreshing contrast to the minimalist, shall we say approach to acting taken by Seagal, whose empty visage is not so much a stone face as a blank slate. A.L.

HOME ALONE II

"The True Meaning of Christmas"

Not so much a sequel as a remake, with many of the same gags from the first film repeated intact. Once again, little Kevin is separated from his family at Christmas, and once again he runs afoul of the pair of bumbling bandits whose plans he thwarted when he was first Home Alone. The film's subtitle, "Lost in New York," is doubly misleading,: he isn't really lost, and he isn't really in New York - merely a New York tourist board's candy-coated fantasy of Manhattan (even Times Square looks gleamingly clean and exciting). Kevin is reunited with his family in time for Christmas, of course, and they are thus able to celebrate with true Yuletide spirit, in a two story penthouse atop the Plaza Hotel, with a huge tree, and plenty of presents supplied by a kindly old toy shop owner. Ahhh... God bless us, everyone. A.L.

THE DISTINGUISHED GENTLEMAN

Vintage Murphy, but Playing it Safe

Jeff Johnson's (Murphy) poiished performance persuades the real congressman Johnson's widow (Cynthia Harris) to help promote his campaign in "The Distinguished Gentleman"

BY ANTHONY LEIBS

Eddie Murphy's career stall doesn't get much of a push with The Distinguished Gentleman, in which he plays a small-time Florida con artist who manages to get elected to the United States Congress, and finds, surprise, surprise, that they are more crooked and dishonest than he ever was.

Murphy wins his seat by shortening his name from Thomas Jefferson Johnson to Jeff Johnson, which happens to be the same name as the oft-reelected incumbent (James Garner), who has just died (much like Nelson Rockefeller) in his office, going out with both a bang and a whimper. Murphy's campaign slogan, "The Name You Know," gets him elected. It's a tragedy fit for a Kennedy.

Once in Washington, Murphy quickly realizes he is on the same criminal wavelength as many of his fellow congressmen. He secures staff positions for his con-artist friends, and ingratiates himself with Dick Dodge (Lane Smith who looks like Bob Dole's bloated, evil twin), the powerful chairman of the Power and Industry sub-committee, which receives more big-business graft than any other.

The joke here is that any con games or scams the congressmen are pulling are condoned by other congressmen, who are more than willing to look the other way as long as there's something in it for them. But it's an old joke told with no edge or subtlety (the tobacco lobbyist has a hacking cough, for example). It scores points anyway - Congress is a target-rich environment for even the most clumsy of satirists - but it isn't as funny as it could (or should) be.

There is even a sub-plot involving a plucky little bald girl, an unfortunate victim of cancer-causing power lines running through Murphy's district, who visits him at his new office. One look at the surgery scars atop her fragile skull (she's just had a brain tumor removed) is enough to convince Murphy he has a cause worth fighting for; too bad the audience isn't convinced as Murphy can't manage to look the slightest bit concerned. It's an obvious attempt at humanizing Murphy, but it fails to convince us that there's a real person underneath that smooth ebony exterior.

This a blatantly crowd-pleasing film, aimed squarely at whatever fan base Murphy still retains after such listless efforts as Harlem Nights, Another 48 Hours and Boomerang. It's a little too eager to please and too eager to rely on old familiar bits. Murphy flashes his million dollar smile about a million times, and it gets tiresome. There's a tinge of desperation about it. After the screening, one moviegoer commented that it was "vintage" Murphy, and in a sense he was right: it should have been made about 10 years ago, when it still might have looked like step ahead, rather than back. ❑

Pure Magic From Disney

What does it say about the film industry when the most entertaining movie to see this week is one that has been drawn, rather than made with human actors? What does it say when a magic carpet hands in a more expressive performance than Keanu Reeves in Dracula? In short, that Disney Pictures have outdone themselves yet again with a sure-to-be classic, Aladdin, in large part thanks to Robin Williams, lending his manic comedic talent to the Genie.

Williams is sure to entertain adults more than kids with his improvised characterizations of Robert DeNiro, Jack Nicholson, William F. Buckley, Jr. and more. The Disney animators keep pace with him, giving his imaginative rantings visual action, and Williams' rapid fire humor is only heightened with these visual aids. Never has an actor been so well suited to an animated figure (although ranting comic Gilbert Gottfried holds his own as the caustic, sputtering parrot Iago, evil sidekick to the villain sorcerer Jafar).

In addition to wishes, the Genie dispenses good advice to Aladdin whether or not he wants to hear it in Walt Disney's Aladdin.

Adults watching the movie — at least the more cynical ones — will certainly find things "improper" with Aladdin. Although Princess Jasmine is as liberated as Belle in Beauty and the Beast (she refuses to be forced into an arranged marriage), she cannot escape being drawn with comely cleavage and a 10-inch waist. Aladdin is a lovable poor boy, but for accuracy's sake, where did this historic Arabian kid pick up giving his monkey "five" and spouting "No way!"? And yes, Aladdin and Jasmine are Semitic in appearance, but there is still something assembly line about their puppy eyes and slim figures. (A sure sign of old age and loss of childhood innocence: attacking an animated Disney movie.)

An integral part of Disney animated flicks are their soundtrack, and Aladdin comes through with a score of jaunty, feel-good songs with hooks simple enough for a kid to tag onto and enjoy. Sometimes the songs, written by Howard Ashman and Alan Menken (and Tim Rice, who filled in for Menken, who died mid-project) are too packed with lyrics, moving so fast the words are indiscernible. The beat goes on, however, and the bottom line is mood over message.

If you haven't seen an animated movie since childhood, go see Aladdin and remember how scary Disney villains can be, how funny Disney comedy can be, and most of all, go to recapture a feeling Disney introduced into many people's childhood: joy. (Thank Robin Williams for that last one.) ❑

"Lee , Washington Make Their Mark"

The epic movie X is an even-handed, engaging treatment of the civil rights leader that is easily the finest of Spike Lee's six movies. In addition to fine performances from Albert Hall, who plays Brother Baines - Malcolm's initiator into Islam - and Delroy Lindo, who plays Malcolm's crime boss father figure Archie, Denzel Washington steals the show as Malcolm X. To compare the articulate, iron-gazed Malcolm at X's conclusion with the hustling, slick-tongued Negro caricature at the beginning, is to realize the enormous talent of Washington. A voice at the end of the film asks, "Did you ever hear Brother Malcolm?" and "Did you ever see him smile?" Spike Lee gives you the opportunity to do so here, and "to do so" is encouraged. T.S.L.

FLIRTING

"An Adolescent Love Story Suitable for Adults"

Despite its terrible title, this Australian film, about the love affair of a white boy and a black girl, is uncommonly intelligent and compassionate, managing to avoid the condescension or overwrought Romeo-and-Juliet preciousness of most teen love pictures. The slight, stuttering boy (Noah Taylor) and beautiful Ugandan girl (Thandie Newton) develop their relationship amid the crushing regimentation of boarding school, maintain their self-respect and dignity in the face of ignorance, racism and petty cruelty. But the film is not a downer - it's charmingly funny, and the various bullies and jerks who torment Bird are, in their own way, complex and sympathetic characters. They're smart enough to recognize the redemptive power of love, and are themselves redeemed. A.L.

THE EFFICIENCY EXPERT

"No Laughs Wasted on This Company"

Anthony Hopkins plays Wallace, a stone-faced consultant who specializes in down-sizing companies, making them efficient and as synchronized as clocks. After walking in on the smiling, ancient employees of a moccasin factory and their dingy, inefficient accommodations, Wallace realizes that factory employees are flesh and blood, and should be treated as such. This comic import from Australia is full of endearing characters, evoking the light-hearted eccentricities of the Ealing comedies of the '40s and '50s like Whiskey Galore and The Lavender Hill Mob. An instructive parable, it provides a lesson in humanity for the corporate leaders of today. J.S.

CLAIRE OF THE MOON

"Women writers in love"

Sex doctor and novelist Noel Benedict (Karen Trumbo) is paired with promiscuous blonde novelist Claire Jabrowski (Trisha Todd) at a women writer's retreat in Oregon. After long discussions and lifestyle clashes, the two women awaken to their love for one another. The movie succeeds when Noel and Claire discuss men, women, intimacy, and sexuality; gradually (arousingly), we follow the two women on their psycho-sexual journey. Unfortunately, writer Nicole Conn provides us with the most annoying batch of secondary character stereotypes imaginable, making some scenes unbearably bad. Claire of the Moon does succeed in delivering a heartfelt look at lesbianism that is ultimately moving. At Coolidge Corner Theater. T.S.L.

JENNIFER EIGHT

"Eight is not Enough"

The premise is intriguing in this film by British writer/director Bruce Robinson (Withnail and I, How to Get Ahead in Advertising): Los Angeles cop John Berlin (Andy Garcia), burnt-out by his job and a failed marriage, flees to Eureka, California, where his old partner has secured him a job on a small police force. Dead bodies start turning up, and no one believes Berlin when he claims a serial killer is on the loose — and it's possible Berlin could be the killer. The overcomplicated plot, however, unrolls in fits and starts, and everything is presented in a confusing fashion. The ending is simply a cheat — everything leading up to it comes too slow, and the end comes too quickly. Hitchcock would have been appalled. A.L.

A Christmas Carol

Sure Footed Entertainment

BY NANCY LEONARD

Streamlined and polished since last year, and almost entirely recast, the Huntington Theatre Company's production of A Christmas Carol is a fine and festive Victorian affair. It's filled with broad acting, striking effects, rich period detail, and considerable comedy to offset the Dickensian darkness. The spirited evening - which unfolds at the Wilbur Theatre through December 27 - is bound to win applause from young and old alike.

This year's outing - again under Larry Carpenter's astute direction - seems less elaborate and less populated than last year's version. The array of Victoriana, while eminently pleasing, is less dazzling and more subordinate to the action now. But the storytelling is clearer and more expeditious. The excessive detail and the murkiness have been trimmed; the entertainment values, heightened. The course of Scrooge's renewal - abetted by fanciful spirits and magical doings - is a winning dramatic tale.

The proceedings begin on a London Christmas eve in 1840. Carolers fill the streets and, with comic repetition, stress the point that Jacob Marley is dead. His partner, Ebenezer Scrooge, a hard and flinty old miser, sneeringly surveys the revelers. He does not believe in Christmas, and humbugs the season in many different ways. The action moves quickly from Scrooge's counting house to his lonely bedchamber - where company members, dotting the crannies, carry the narrative along.

Marley's ghost - lumbering forth from a smoke-filled fireplace under the weight of heavy chains - recounts the perils of an uncharitable life and warns of a visit from three spirits. Scrooge is fearful and disbelieving, but shortly is awakened by the Ghost of Christmas Past - a young woman in white, who appears in a blinding flash. The music and the people from his past quickly transform the old man. His lost happiness becomes difficult to bear.

David Petrarca director of "Marvin's Room" at the Hasty Pudding Theater

The Spirit of Christmas Present materializes behind a lit doorway. This garlanded figure in an enveloping forest-green robe finds a receptive pupil as their tour looks in on various Christmas celebrations. The Cratchit family and nephew Fred toast the absent miser, who formerly abhorred such Yuletide joy. But it's the third ghost - a towering, darkly hooded apparition with silvery skeletal hands - who ensures the future will be altered. Scrooge cannot abide society's joy upon his demise, or the woe that comes to the Cratchit family at that time. Falling to his knees, he vows to avert those shadows and honor Christmas throughout the year.

Paul Benedict's Scrooge is played with conviction and obvious relish. There's no mistaking Scrooge's emotions at any turn. At times, the very obvious reactions smack of overplaying, but they emanate from the cartoonlike unreality of the production and connect perfectly with the audience. He is delightful in terror and tenderness.

Other actors adeptly play multiple roles. George Ede is more confident and effective this year as Marley's Ghost, and strong in his other parts. Maureen Silliman brings nice appeal to the Ghost of Christmas Past, but there's a tad more silliness than charm in her giggly Cynthia. James Javore makes Christmas Present almost a cheerful garden sprite.

Tony Aylward is better as Fezziwig than as Bob Cratchit, who could be more deeply characterized. Darcy Pulliam is good as Mrs. Cratchit. John Patrick Rice catches nephew Fred's goodheartedness, but could use more personal appeal. Dee Nelson sweetly impersonates Scrooge's abandoned fiancee and Fred's wife. James Coelho endows Topper, Fred's bachelor friend, with ingratiating energy. Children and choristers round out the cast.

Like last year, the evening is filled with seasonal music and special effects. The eerie noises and unexpected flashes of light are also part of the fun. Just about everything seems purposive now, and the comedy nicely balances the somber tones. It's a rich and warmly detailed entertainment despite the dark shadows which shroud so much of the story. And the end, as you can imagine, is suffused with charity and hope.

James Leonard Joy's cardboard cut-out sets and painted drops remain a truly delightful evocation of Victorian England. Mariann Verheyen's period costumes are varied and elaborate, though they seem less opulent the second time round. Craig Miller's shadowy lighting is wonderfully moody and effective. John Kilgore's sound design is a bit undercut by electronic gremlins, but still functions as a key element of the drama. Catherine Stornetta's music and Daniel Pelzig's choreography add lustre.

A great deal of thought and talent has gone into the Huntington's Christmas Carol.

This musicalized Victoriana is sure-footed entertainment, guaranteed to stir good feelings in its audience. Glad tidings from the Huntington for one and all! ❑

Marvin's Room

A Vision Of Love and Selflessness

BY NANCY LEONARD

It's a bit misleading to consider Marvin's Room a comedy. Its humor and irreverence dance so tightly with illness and death that you get a kind of intermediate balance between the light and darkness, with one canceling the other out. But in dealing lightheartedly with his deadly serious subject matter - perhaps the only way to get an audience to confront issues it would prefer to avoid - playwright Scott McPherson is really concerned with the quality of living, and with paying tribute, most unsentimentally, to the selfless good residing in us all. His small-scale work at the Hasty Pudding Theatre was a decidedly warm affirmation of the human spirit.

Marvin's Room - which received "Best Play" honors this year from the Drama Desk and the Outer Critics Circle - focuses on Bessie, an unmarried woman who moved to Florida 20 years ago with her father Marvin and his sister Ruth. After a stroke and diverse other illnesses, Marvin is bed-ridden and in need of considerable care. Dotty Ruth has a painful back condition, temporarily alleviated by an "electronic anesthetizer," whose unfortunate side effect is to set off the garage door opener. Bessie has been cheerfully caring for these two family members, but may not be able to continue doing so.

The play begins when Bessie's fatigue and easy bruising are diagnosed as leukemia (rather than a vitamin deficiency), and moves on to the possibility of a bone marrow transplant. Bessie contacts her sister Lee in Ohio, with whom she's had little communication over the years. Lee is a single mother who's barely coping with two troubled sons. Her teenager, Hank, is confined to a mental hospital because he burned down the house. The younger boy, Charlie, reads all the time but isn't doing well in school. By the grace of a church-sponsored bake sale and the generosity of the mental hospital, the three arrive in Florida to see if they will be suitable candidates for the transplant.

In the course of the waiting, McPherson - through a series of crisply humorous, perfectly pitched scenes - brings his family together, and salutes the world's caregivers. While the storm-tossed Lee instinctively puts Hank down and tries to control him, Bessie senses when to let go and unerringly reinforces his desire for maturity.

The boys pitch in, and Lee comes to know her sister - sharing the memory of a lost love, and comforting her when a turn for the worse interrupts a Disneyland outing. The emotional climax is simple and direct: in the midst of Bessie's darkest fears, she pronounces herself lucky to have had Marvin and Ruth to love for so many years.

Director David Petrarca - who staged the world premiere in 1990 at Chicago's Goodman Theatre, and its subsequent off-Broadway production - makes much of McPherson's lovingly absurdist, low-key style. Swipes at the medical profession, the Roman Catholic Church, and bureaucratic institutions easily mix with the other concerns.

Through all its quick cuts and varied locales, the accumulating action is fast paced and sharply focused.

Carol Schultz, younger than you'd first expect, is touchingly human as the suddenly ill Bessie. She combines resilience, natural humanity, duty, and fear in a most understandable way - creating the picture of a good person continuing to do good in circumstances that would daunt lesser souls. Nance Williamson's Lee, a floozy in tight jeans and big hair, is manipulative and shrill at the outset, fending off family connection with harsh denunciation. But she grows emotionally in Bessie's loving domain.

Mary Diveny's Ruth is fluttery and forgetful - quite sweet whether she's positing a divine reason for life's vicissitudes or dressing up for a TV wedding.

Mark Rosenthal nicely captures Hank's sullen resentment and need for approval. Marty Zentz is fine as the bookish Charlie who's also a natural giver. Tim Monson is the cartoonlike Dr. Wally, who can't remember Bessie's name. Jeremiah Kissel and Brenda Pressley play small roles with flair. Don Scope is the unseen Marvin - whose bed is a shadowy outline behind a translucent glass-brick wall.

Linda Buchanan's set is comic-book serviceable. Robert Christen's lighting casts an irreverent glow. Claudia Boddy's costumes are OK.

The AIDS epidemic, never mentioned, is the underpinning of Marvin's Room. Its vision of love and selflessness in the face of harsh fate sweetly affirms the best part of the human spirit ❑

Scott McPherson died shortly after the opening of the play, from complications associated with AIDS.

LOON MOUNTAIN

Varied Terrain, and A Gondola To Boot

BY ERIC PETERSON

Sticking needles in your eyes. Having a tooth drilled without Novocain. Walking on hot coals. Skiing in the rain. These are not fun things. And if you've ever spent a day riding chairlifts while 40-degree rain trickles down your neck and your butt sits pruning in an icy puddle, you know that the above experiences are equally miserable. On some rainy days in January, even the "needles-in-the-eyes" thing begins to sound good. Unfortunately, if you ski in New England, you can probably count on at least one rainy, "prune butt" ski day a year. But if you're lucky, you'll be at Loon Mountain in Lincoln, New Hampshire, where the skiing is bearable.

Skiing at Loon often contains those classic "Good News/Bad News" scenarios. For instance, the good news is that Loon is only a few hours north of Boston. The bad news is that a result of its proximity to town creates crowds at peak times. The good news is they usually have good snow. The bad news is it can get skied off quickly. The good news is there is a lot of varied, interesting terrain. The bad news is there are too many Camaro Cowboys from Revere who would ski in tank tops if it didn't freeze the hair on their backs. For a day trip from Boston though, it's tough to beat Loon - even on a rainy day.

I skied there for the first time this year at the start of the Thanksgiving washout. (They sure weren't giving thanks for the weather at any ski areas this year.) As you can guess, it was raining that day. Fortunately, Loon had built a decent base through snowmaking during the unseasonably cold October nights. This allowed them to come through the recent rains and to keep trails open from top to bottom. The conditions are currently the same as they were at the start of the wet season, with four or five of the 41 trails open. Loon is running three lifts, but this includes the beginner's bunny lift, so it's really like 2 1/2 lifts. But the godsend on a rainy day at Loon is that their gondola is running.

There is nothing better than entering these "airbuses," sitting down on a warm, dry seat and whisking one's self to the top of the mountain. With little appeal associated with most ski gimmickry these days (like heated booths or tip mounted vibration dampeners for example), the gondola is a luxury in foul weather. In spite of the downpour, and even though the terrain was limited to intermediate runs off the gondola, conditions were remarkably good. Unfortunately, they rapidly deteriorated into wet mush under the twin assault of the constant skier traffic, and yes, the weather.

A view of the downhill fun at Loon...

Skiing fanatics enjoy a sunny day of mountain activities at Loon Mountain

Loon's biggest problem lies in opening more terrain. Since all of the trails feed in together at the bottom of the mountain, the snow gets skied off quickly. If you try to keep to the sides of the run, you'll run into a problem with traffic (based on this particular day). This includes dealing with constantly traversing beginners and crazed snowboarders. One snowboarder literally ran me off the trail.

LOON MOUNTAIN

LINCOLN, NEW HAMPSHIRE
2 HOURS FROM BOSTON
41 TRAILS OF SKIABLE TERRAIN;
SNOWMAKING ABILITY

Skiers, let me remind you of the greatest advantage you have over snowboarders: you are armed with ski poles. Be sure to remind the occasional snowboarder of this fact with a quick jab in the leg now and then. It will keep them humble and help with your pole plants. Snowboarders, stay out of the way or stick to practicing skateboard tricks outside of the Store 24. Once Loon opens more trails, especially those around Camp III, traffic shouldn't be an issue, however.

The hot new development at Loon this year is the Loon Points system. This is likely to be the wave of the future in skiing, so pay attention. It works like this: you buy a ticket with a certain number of points - either 100, 200 or 400 - coded onto it. Each time you go through a lift, a bar code scanner reads your ticket and subtracts a certain number of points from your total. Each lift is assigned a point value that varies with the length of the lift. The gondola, for example is worth 25 points. In other words it works just like your meal plan in college. The mountain management figures that 200 points is approximately equal to a full day of skiing for an intermediate skier. The best part about the system is that the points will be good for three years, so there is no pressure to "ski your money's worth." This allows the system to provide an even better solution than cramming in the gondola on a rainy day: go back inside to the bar and use your points on another day.

Loon has plans to expand the mountain and increase their snowmaking capacity in the near future. Hopefully, their efforts to improve conditions won't wreck an already terrific mountain management. They should, however, lose the cutesy little train that connects the base lodges together. It looks like something stolen from the Santa's Village theme park, and is certainly more out of place than truly "Loon-ish" transportation - like a dogsled. ❑

St. Cloud

High Expectations Disappointing Outcome

BY MEG WORDEN AND MARCUS APICIUS

There was once a time when St. Cloud was so trendy, you couldn't even get a table on a traditionally "off" night before 10 p.m. But that was before their brilliant chef Tanneguy Jayat returned to France. Since then, we have heard whispers that things were no longer quite the same. Recently, the restaurant reopened after a remodeling effort, and we thought this would be a good time to find out how much things had changed, both visually and gastronomically.

You can expect some dramatic and effective changes in the decor at St. Cloud. The walls that were once dark are now white, the window tables beside the bar have been replaced by high bar tables and stools, the lighting has been improved in the cafe area, and most drastic of all, the entrance is now at the cafe end of the bar, which creates a larger dining room. The style of the menu remains much the same. It retains small plates in addition to full-sized entrees, but prices are undoubtedly lower than they used to be, with most entrees priced under $20.00. We wish we could say the same about the wine list, but prices here were decidedly on the high side, with full bottles starting in the mid twenties.

A problem we experienced in the past continues to haunt us in the new, renovated version. We refer to the kitchen's seeming inability to serve the food while it's still hot. It clearly has something to do with the kitchen being in the basement, but you'd think the problem would have been addressed by now.

On to the food itself, and we have to say from the start that with the notable exception of the desserts, almost everything had disappointing features to it. The soup of the day ($4.50) was cream of wild mushroom; it was tepid, anemic and woefully underseasoned, yet the sour cream and shiitake mushroom garnish were tasty and helped to compensate a little. Grilled squid with lemon, capers and parsley ($6.50) was nicely tender, but marred by its accompaniments: the vinaigrette was too assertively sweet yet sour, soaking into and spoiling the otherwise good squid ink noodles. The tomato in the salad was decidedly "off." The game pate ($7.50) was actually a terrine, and after several attempts to find out its content, we gave up. Our waiter thought it contained duck, veal and pork, which doesn't sound like game to us. At any rate, it was too heavy and underseasoned, though all its accompaniments (especially the frisee lettuce tossed in vinaigrette and the croutons) were very good.

We couldn't resist the crispy confit of duck leg with foie gras ravioli and orange port sauce ($18.00), but lived to regret this choice. The duck was tender, but way too salty, and although crisp as promised, tasted as if it had been deep fried. It was, in fact, thoroughly nasty. We couldn't help but compare this duck confit with the one served at a certain bistro across the road, and quite honestly, there is no comparison. We were split over the ravioli (most of the party liking it), though the disgruntled person who ordered this dish said they tasted like sweaty socks. Lamb used to be a signature dish at St. Cloud, so we had to try the grilled rack of lamb ($23.00); three of the four ribs came rare as ordered, but were barely warm enough. The sauce (a veal reduction, we guessed), was very good, but the accompanying eggplant and goat cheese flan brought mixed reactions, ranging from "godawful" from one diner, to the more restrained comment from another that perhaps including rosemary was a mistake, as it made it a little too bitter. The half tomato that also came with it had an unpleasant "off" taste. The grilled balsamic tuna was very good, except it was cooked "medium well" instead of rare as requested. A first taste of the accompanying basil papardelle produced enthusiastic comments, but as we worked our way down to the bottom of the little mound, the strands became increasingly mushy, and it was apparent that the pasta had not been correctly tossed with the sauce before serving. The tuna also came with an excellent black olive and artichoke relish (fresh artichokes) that was marred by being served almost ice cold.

We were very nervous about ordering dessert, but were very pleasantly surprised. Persimmon bread pudding was nicely moist and studded with walnuts. The accompanying sabayon sauce was very good, and the garnish of preserved kumquats provided an unusual counterpoint. The bittersweet chocolate mousse was served in a huge cookie crust cup and garnished with dried cherries. The cup sat in a delicious puddle of slightly tart raspberry sauce - a perfect foil for the chocolate. We were able to identify apples and dried apricots in the very pleasing warm compote of fall fruits. An excellent hazelnut waffle and some tasty maple ice cream rounded out this dessert. All desserts cost $5.50, and are very generous in size.

So now we think we have identified the place to go for your after-theater dessert and coffee. As for the rest, well don't say we didn't warn you. At the end of the evening, one member of our party (hitherto a devoted restaurant goer) said, "I don't think I like eating out any more." That just about summed it up for all of us. ❑

By Marge Chryssostomidis and Peter McNamara

News from the Improper Bostonian: There are plans to start a unique feature in the classified section, namely, a Help Wanted column exclusively for restaurant staff. This will be the place for restaurant owners and managers to advertise vacancies of all kinds. Look for this in a future issue.

What Kind of Drink Am I?

Specialty drinks are something of an art form, and one artist in this particular medium is Rick Brook, bartender at the Armadillo Cafe. All the drinks on the menu are his own creations, and his latest masterpiece is the Tequila Bomb, a delicious combination of white tequila, melon liqueur, fresh lime and lemon, served layered with blue curacao.

News from Newbury Street

The latest restaurant to open is Full House at number 264, tel. 437-6787. Owned by Alfred Ngan and Gordon Chan, this little basement place specializes in Cantonese-style barbecue, with rotisserie duck, chicken and pork on the menu, as well as daily specials. Prices are pleasantly low, and food is available to eat-in or take-out. They also deliver locally...Last month, too, Mirabelle (tel. 859-4848) opened up at number 85. You can tell that much thought and care has gone into its design: the very attractive interior uses bubinga wood from Africa for the floor and furniture, the seats are upholstered in plum (mirabelle is a French plum), there is a specially commissioned mural on one wall, a special ceiling imported from Japan (possibly the first such in the U.S.) is filled with sound absorbing pinholes, while the bathrooms look stunning with their granite counters. It is open daily, offering breakfast, lunch and dinner, teas, and supper all day Sunday. There is a full (standing) bar, wines all come in half bottles to encourage sampling, and valet parking...Meanwhile at 29 Newbury Street, an art display by the staff is currently being featured. And guess what - they have yet another new chef.

Sweet and Special

We recently came across some pretty sensational desserts, and it turned out they were made by Michael Rugnatta, owner of Joseph's Pastry Shoppe Inc., a family owned business at 489 Gallivan Boulevard, Dorchester, tel. 282-7766. He used to be pastry chef at the Colonnade Hotel, and received high praise from Bob Levey in his 1990 review of Zachary's. We can personally vouch for his chocolate symphony and his cranberry cheesecake torte with crumb topping. You need to order his special desserts in advance, but 24 hours notice is sufficient, and he offers a delivery service. Local restaurants are expressing an interest in his creations, some of which you can sample at the recently reopened Hampshire House Library Grill.

Cider and Socks

You'd hardly expect Timberland to be the place to go for fine foods, but the Newbury Street store is now stocking products from Stonewall Kitchen, a tiny New Hampshire company who until now had no local outlet. A recent visit turned up Grand Marnier cranberry marmalade, sugar plum jam, red pepper jelly, dill mustard vinegar, raspberry vinegar, olive oil with green olives, and mulled cider mix, with more products expected soon. These items make great gifts - not only are they high quality, but they also look absolutely fabulous.

My, You're Fresh

If you want something a little out of the ordinary when cooking for the holidays, be sure to check out Fresh Louie's at 349 Newbury Street, tel. 247-1474, where you will find many varieties of baby vegetables, as well as haricots, verts and wild mushrooms. Owner Lou Alex, a strong believer in personal service, will gladly place special orders for you, offer cooking suggestions, and deliver to local addresses.

People in the News

Jill Ryder has departed from the Lenox Hotel's Food and Beverage Department to pursue a career promoting Australian foods...Welcome to Terry Rawlins, the new Food and Beverage Director at the Four Seasons Hotel...Welcome also to Markus Ripperger, new chef at the Hampshire House Library Grill, whose experience was obtained in some of the finer Boston restaurants, including Apley's, the Meridien and Zachary's.

The Juicy Details

It's that time again - yes, truffle season - and at Ristorante Toscano you will find menu specials showcasing the inimitable white truffle ...Cornucopia's plans to move into a Back Bay location have fallen through, and on February 1, they will take over from Cherrystone's on the water front...Bnu will also be changing hands: Ross Cameron and David Wainright of the Back Bay Bistro have plans to take over, having evidently changed their minds about opening a restaurant in Brookline...That veritable landmark Harvard Gardens has been closed for remodeling, and will be sporting a new menu as well as a new look. Reopening is scheduled for December 8, when Pizza and Pasta will be the main focus of the food...Some of you may remember Cook's Magazine, which flourished in the 1980s, then died in 1990. It has now been reborn as Cook's Illustrated, and a free trial issue can be obtained by calling 1-800-544-7100...Urban Pain - oops - Au bon Pain at Kenmore Square recently instituted a commendable policy to help the environment. Now, paper bags will not be given to customers ordering takeout food unless they specifically request one. Keep up the good work...And finally - Open Sesame is no more. Closed Sesame, you might say.

A correction: Last issue we announced the opening of Foster's Bar and Grill, but a vital word was omitted from the address. The restaurant is in the Cambridge Street Holiday Inn in Boston . ❑

BY JONATHON ALSOP

I believe in doing things the easy way. But once the holidays roll around, I start getting calls from family and friends looking for wine advice, and it gets complicated. There are basically two kinds of calls. The first is the "I'm-no-wine-expert call." I ask what they like, they say they can't remember and that they just need wine. It's an easy fix. I pretend to ask a couple of other attentive questions, then recommend something everybody loves to death. This works great with my mother.

The second kind of call is somewhat touchier. In a nutshell, this call represents a scenario where loved ones are contemplating serving an over-priced wine that they've never tasted, probably won't like, with food they've never had and to people they don't know - all because it's the holidays. Given this information, tell me, how do YOU think it's going to work out? It's important to remember that you're allowed to enjoy wine, especially during the holidays.

Use this slightly improper guide in health. Suitable for refrigerator framing.

Three Reds, Four Whites, Two Pinks (?) And a Sparkler Under $10

Sometimes you don't want to experiment with wine. Maybe you're having a lot of different people over whose taste you don't know. You can't take chances and have to go for a sure thing that people are just going to lap up.

Red wines: 1990 duBoef Beaujolais Morgon, $8, available everywhere. 1990 Ravenswood Vintner's Blend Zinfandel, $9, available everywhere. 1990 Les Violette Cotes-du-Rhone, $10, Blanchard's in Allston, Chestnut Hill Wine Cellars and others.

White wines: 1991 La Crema Select White Creme de Tete, $7, available everywhere. 1991 Buena Vista Sauvignon Blanc, $8, available everywhere. 1991 Murphy-Goode Fume Blanc, $9, available almost everywhere. 1989 Merkelbach Erziger Wurzgarten Spatlese (as if any person could actually remember a name like that!), on sale at Marty's, $9, normally $12.

Pink wines: 1988 Edna Valley Vineyard Pinot Noir Vin Gris, $8, Brookline Liquor Mart. 1991 Bonny Doon Vin Gris de Cigare, $8, available everywhere.

Sparkler: Jean Perico, Cava, $8, Brookline Liquor Mart and others. Surprisingly good for the money and very easy to drink. Much better than the reprehensible Freixenet.

Wine With Food Made Way Too Hard

The holidays are such easy times to match up wine with food, mostly because I'm opening all my favorite bottles anytime I want at the slightest provocation! I recommend you do exactly the same thing.

With chicken, serve your favorite California chardonnay or French white Burgundy. With beef, your favorite California cabernet or your favorite red Bordeaux. If you cook Italian, go to your favorite Chianti or Dolcetto. With seafood, California sauvignon blanc and fume blanc cannot be beat. The list of working combinations is endless. This time of year, just go for your favorites and live!

How To Buy Wine For A Holiday Party

Remember: what you buy is not necessarily what you'll consume, but it's important to have enough. Here are the equations. They yield about one extra bottle per case, so you always have back-up. In a case where the equation leaves you with a partial bottle, always round up.

Dinner party wine, entree only: (total number of people) multiplied by (2 glasses of wine per person) divided by (5 glasses of wine per bottle) equals (total number of bottles).

Dinner party wine, appetizer and entree: (total number of people) multiplied by (3 glasses of wine per person) divided by (5 glasses of wine per bottle) equals (total number of bottles).

Wine party, two-thirds white and one-third red: (total number of people) multiplied by (4 glasses of wine per person) divided by (5 glasses of wine per bottle) equals (total number of bottles).

Holiday Wine Gifts From $10 To $100

J. Lohr Chardonnay, $10, available everywhere. People who think they don't like wine invariably love J. Lohr. Nice presentation for a gift, too.

Villa Caffaggio Chianti Classico, about $20 by the magnum (double bottle) depending on the vintage, available at Brookline Liquor Mart. Don't kid yourself. Bigger is better.

One bottle each: 1989 Guigal Cotes-du-Rhone, Gigondas and Chateauneuf-du-Pape, about $50 all together, available everywhere. Solid choice for the Francophile on your list.

Mixed case (12 bottles) Bonny Doon wines: Chardonnay, Vin Blanc, Vir. Gris de Cigare, Clos de Gilroy, Big House Red, Ca' del Solo, Ca' del Bianco, and many others, as little as $75 for the case, available almost everywhere. Winemaker Randall Grahm is a wild man, and his personality comes through loud and clear on the playful labels and in these big, fun-loving wines. Although not something Gramps is going to dig in a big way, the Bonny Doon is an excellent idea for a young wine lover.

Case 1989 Chateau Recougne Bordeaux Red, $100, available at Brookline Liquor Mart, see Chuck. An excellent petite chateau Bordeaux at a bargain-basement price. Very tasty and ready to drink now, but unfortunately tempting, since 10 or 20 years in the cellar yields a wine that's almost better than the best. An excellent gift. Drink six in the relatively near future, then put six away till the year 2000.

Tastings Around Town

Brookline Liquor Mart, Allston: Saturday 2-4 pm. Blanchard's in Allston, tastings every Friday 5-8 pm and every Saturday 2-5 pm. Winecellar of Silene, Copley and Waltham, Fridays 4-6:30 pm and Saturdays 2-4:30 pm. Marty's in Allston, Saturdays 1-3 pm. Bauer on Newbury Street, Saturdays 4-7 pm. Kappy's in Sudbury and Mall Wines at Fresh Pond in Cambridge, Saturdays noon - 6 pm.

Fine Wine On A Tight Budget

Brookline Liquor Mart, 1985 Augustin Peyrouse Cotes du Rhone Cuvee Personnelle, $9. Big, mature Cotes du Rhone that's ready to drink now. Great flavors, beautiful dryness, just like a junior Chateauneuf-du-Pape. A steal at $9. Beacon Beverage, Brookline, 1988 Buehler Pinot Blanc, $4. Very light and clean, simple and well-made. 1988 turns out to have been a great year for California Pinot Blanc, and this Buehler makes for a refreshing switch from Napa Chardonnay to something a little different from Napa.

Mention this column and receive a free fifth of Kibowi Kiwi Liqueur product of Holland, compliments of Harry, a guy who really knows how to say "Happy Holidays!"

Don't dribble on the tables as you sip café au lait from a bowl and play your favorite parlor games. Chess and backgammon boards courtesy of your hosts. If you're not into games, grab a mag from the racks and kick back to New Age music while feasting on one of the many vegetarian specials. Sun. 12-9pm.

WARREN TAVERN,

2 Pleasant St., Charlestown, 241-8142
Take a step back into history this Sunday, approximately 212 years. The Warren Tavern is one of the oldest restaurants in the country and the first place to be rebuilt after Charlestown burned down in the Battle of Bunker Hill. The Tavern features an original decor of low beamed ceilings, church pew benches and a 25 ft. oak bar. Cuisine is straight forward American with a little international flair. Brunch from 12:00 to 3:30. $4.95 - $6.95

A Few Minutes With The Boss

One on One With Bruce Springsteen

BY GREG REIBMAN

He has been, by far, the best, most consistent, performer of the last three decades. His high-octane concerts - still regularly clocking-in at more than three hours - typically exhaust screaming, dancing, exhilarated fans long before he seems tired himself.

So would you believe that Bruce Springsteen gets stage fright?

That's the word according to the Boss, who says he depends on the roar of the crowd to create those moments that make a Springsteen concert legendary.

"You're always afraid to go on tour," he confesses. "It's scary. You're always worried about exposing yourself. You're saying, 'This is where I stand. This is what I think. This is the music I believe in.' Everybody is screaming and you're backstage saying, 'Geez, what am I doing? I better be good.'

"But playing is also the thing that has given me so much satisfaction," he continues. "It's probably the single thing I do best. It's an intense emotional, spiritual and physical experience that really calls on giving everything you've got."

If Springsteen's blistering two night stand at the Worcester Centrum in August was any indication, he still has a lot to give. He returns to the area, Dec. 13 and 14 for two sold-out Boston Garden shows.

"The idea is you're in a room and you're chasing something in the night You're chasing a certain feeling or certain spirit. You're waiting for that moment when you raise yourself up. When you feel yourself go and then everybody else will be there," he explained recently.

It's Springsteen's first tour since 1988 and (except for holdover keyboardist Roy Bittan) his first-ever tour without the E Street Band.

"The E Street Band were one of the best bands in the world," he says. "We were together for 15 years. Some of the guys were with me for 20 years. We had a great time. But I wanted to push the edges out a little bit and try something new.

"I just wanted to see how it felt with some different musicians. I wanted to maintain the richness of the sound and color. I wanted to maintain the R&B feel. But I also wanted to push it out into some areas of gospel music and be more guitar-driven. I've got confidence in every player on stage now."

BRUCE SPRINGSTEEN
DECEMBER 13 & 14
AT THE BOSTON GARDEN
ALL TICKETS ARE SOLD OUT

With new players, the focus is strongly on Bruce, from his bow-legged strut to the sparkle in his eye. The man onstage - and on recent albums "Human Touch" and "Lucky Town" - has changed too: He's a family man now, married with two children to E Street vocalist Patty Scialfa. And at 43, he's also a multi-millionaire, with a mansion in Beverly Hills and a home in New Jersey.

"When I started, I wanted to document what it would be like to grow up in America," he says. "Most of my characters were people who either started down under or were on the outside and tried to work their way in - to try to find a place they can call home, a place to stand, a place to make a life for themselves."

Springsteen's songs relay those same feelings today. Only now, instead of being teenagers, many of his characters are in their 40's.

"I've had some ups and downs but I'm real committed to the music I'm playing right now and this band that I have," he says. "My idea is to draw my own map and maybe help people draw their maps." ❑

Centuries of Holiday Music

BY STEVEN D. BROWN

Every Christmas brings an overwhelming selection of musical choices - literally centuries of them - to celebrate the season. Here are a few suggestions to enhance the musical ambience of the holidays, many of them from artists who make their homes in Boston.

John Langstaff and The Revels celebrate the season with A Child's Christmas Revels (Revel Records), a program of carols from England, France and America, in settings accompanied by medieval instruments and a handbell choir. Closing the program is the traditional Mummer's play, St. George and the Dragon, in a performance featuring Morning Pro Musica's Robert J. Lurtsema.

The latest musical offering from Joel Cohen and the Boston Camerata, A Baroque Christmas (Elektra Nonesuch), has as its principal work a fluid performance of Charpentier's Messe de Minuit sur des Airs de Noel. Sharing the program are works by Monteverdi, Schein and Purcell.

Martin Pearlman leads America's premiere period-instrument orchestra, Boston Baroque, in a brisk and spirited realization of Handel's Messiah (Telarc). Joining the chorus and orchestra are soloists Karen Clift, Catherine Robbin, Bruce Fowler and Victor Ledbetter. Boston Baroque compares favorably to European period-instrument groups and easily outclasses Nicholas McGegan's Philharmonia Baroque in terms of sonic richness.

Hark! (RCA) unites clarinetist Richard Stoltzman, the Boys Choir of Harlem, the Guildhall Strings and some of New York's finest session players in a collection of meditative arrangements of Christmas favorites best suited for late night listening. Along with a couple of Christmas Ales, Stoltzman and company set the mood for "a long winter's nap."

Former Steeleye Span member Maddy Prior joins The Carnival Band in A Tapestry of Carols (Saydisc), a collection of traditional songs and carols spliced with Celtic and Appalachian flavors. An ideal choice for party time and making merry the season.

For holiday in an ecclesiastical mode, The Choir of Trinity Church is positively resplendent in Candlelight Carols (London). Among the nineteen selections is the haunting Welsh carol Suo Gan, the recurring motif in Empire of the Sun. The shimmering acoustics of Trinity Church provide warmth and the choir produces a sound that is opulent yet hushed.

Best wishes for a happy, and music-filled season! ❑

Wednesday's House Special

Random House of Soul Keeps "Soul Kitchen" Cookin'

BY SANDER WOLF

Random House of Soul, one of Boston's best funk bands, has come a long way since publicizing itself by way of altering subway advertisements during its vandal freshman year. "We've become legitimate," explains drummer Andrew Frawley, and that phrase is the one which best describes the many changes in the ever maturing band. Since that initial period (which actually began even before the band's line-up was fixed) Random House of Soul released a four song cassette, scored a new manager, and most importantly landed probably the best local band gig in town.

The gig is called the "Soul Kitchen" and features a performance of the band every Wednesday night at Bill's Bar on Lansdowne Street along with a couple of DJ's and a funk-hungry crowd. It's a carnival of funk and soul that has become a "very good thing" for the band. The gig, along with other local shows at the Paradise, TT the Bear's and Northeastern University, has begun to take the band in a different direction than before.

Soul Chefs at Bill's, Random House of Soul

On Random House of Soul's tape that came out earlier this year sequences and samples deftly navigate around tight arrangements. The combination of electronics and acoustics makes for driving original songs like "Dr. Spin," an ode to the spin doctors that always appear around election time, and adds spice to standards like the Beatles "Mother Nature's Son." But even thought the tape is fairly recent and still a valid statement from the band, in some ways it's already out of date. The rash of live shows has taken the band out of the comforts of the studio and placed it onto the unpredictable stage where it is forced to come up with new songs every week to keep the crowd coming back. Since most of the new songs come from the stage and not the studio they have a stronger feel and, whether it's good or bad, rely less on technology.

"We try to come up with new stuff [every week]. That was one of the reasons we took the gig, and it did get us to come up with three or four songs in a hurry," says keyboardist Damir Prcic amazed at the achievement. Lead vocalist/guitarist Matthew Stone concurs, "One gig equals at least three rehearsals in experience points." The new songs include a rap about Frawley tentatively titled "Funky Drewsta," and an innuendo filled song called "South," which is highlighted by a chorus so faithful to the seventies that you can almost hear the disco ball spinning over your head. Added to the band's jazzy cover of the theme from TV's "Sesame St." the current crop of new songs are ripe and ready for a new recording.

Luckily, that's just what Random House of Soul plans to do in the upcoming months - record a new CD length album and hopefully get it released by a major label. It's a lofty aspiration shared by many other Boston bands, but Random House of Soul just might be the one to get away with it. ❑

When Two Tribes Go To Tour

Peter Himmelman & Shona Laing Play the Paradise

BY REY ROLDAN

Uniting Minnesota with New Zealand isn't too easy geographically, but Minnesotian Peter Himmelman and New Zealander Shona Laing are bringing together two separate climates through guitars and stirring lyrics in a joint tour. Himmelman, who occasionally and unexpectantly takes the audience through musical tours that have ended up on roofs, in the middle of "a busy Street in New York City in front of Tramps" or "on horse carriages that circled around a park in Seattle," does not buy into the whole mad-about-the-world rock who speaks of "utter hopelessness, total disillusionment, throw-up-your-hands-and-let's-just-rock-until-the-night-is-gone-because-we're-gonna-die-anyway sort of thing. It bores me to death," he said in an interview the day after Thanksgiving. "It doesn't look at history. It looks from 1960 to now. I view the world as a little crack of light that I look for. There's a little bit of hope amid the bleak world."

Laing whose last release South was released on TVT Records nearly five ago, is suffering the same fate that Trent Reznor did with the same label. Like Reznor whose Nine Inch Nails' debut was a hit, South spawned two hits "Soviet Snow" and "Glad I'm Not a Kennedy" but she has yet to see a profit. "I haven't seen a penny," she said. Instead of the computerized dance beats that dominated a bulk of South, her new album New on Earth (Epic) is rootsier and more rock-based and thus, more personal and intimate. "But with my new album and label, things are looking brighter."

Appearing at the Paradise on Sunday, Dec. 13, Himmelman and Laing are set to rock the club. But Himmelman has his own plans for the show. "I have a job to accomplish," he said If I can't accomplish it in a certain physical space, I'll change the space." Too bad Paradise has a pretty good sound system. ❑

Jon Svetkey
"This Is Now"
ECP Records

Jon Svetkey, a local folk singer whose voice equals his expressive and memorable lyrics, is at his best singing character sketches. In the bittersweet, a travelling salesman tells about his lonely, routine life ("It's an okay life, no complaints/ I'll probably be selling things until I die"). "Big City," the album's best track, brings us into the mind of an honest, hardworking small town family who should be at peace with his life ("I've got everything I need in my backyard and my garage/ My wife, she's a good cook and she's still kinda pretty/ So why should I bother with the Big City?"). But, by the song's conclusion, the narrator is slowly losing touch with his wife whom he "Doesn't see much anymore."

On most of the songs, Svetkey's simple but competent acoustic guitar is the only accompaniment, but he also sometimes adds harmony vocals or a well-placed trumpet ("Laughing Out Loud"). Svetkey also adds a touch of the indignation on the bitter "Talking with My Heart," subtitled "An Open Letter to a Revisionist." While it is difficult to write about such topics in a three-minute song, Svetkey does well, avoiding clichés and/or misplaced rants. Less successful is "(I Want to Be a) Cheerleader," a one-joke country parody that should have been axed for another one of Svetkey's mature, intelligent modern folk songs.

Brenda Kahn
"Epiphany In Brooklyn"
Chaos/Columbia

From the initial incidental description of the "white trash chick at the counter" in "I Don't Sleep, I Drink Coffee Instead" Epiphany In Brooklyn tackles characterization after vivid characterization as it attempts to explain a small portion of singer/songwriter Brenda Kahn's life - and at the same time everyone else's. Lilting acoustic guitars and Kahn's sweetly strained vocal give the album an intimate, backyard feel that probably comes across equally as well (if not better) live. It's a comfortable sound juxtaposed with words that offer quite a different perspective.

Take the song "Mint Juleps And Needles" for example. In it, Kahn describes a salty bar and an even saltier character addicted to "Mint Juleps and Needles [that] don't add up to wisdom," and sires one of the most descriptive, yet cryptic lines on the album when she complains, "I left a stain on your glass/ You called it a scar." It's a rough situation mildly smeared by a brief distance in time and far from just a simple slice of Americana. But from the music you would expect a midwestern bar brawl, or at least someone crying in their pretzels. Instead you get the music suggesting something far more active than the lyrical introspection layered on top. It's a mild clash possibly attributed to the simple ensemble Kahn has to work with, but one that could have been remedied. Partly because of the instrumental palette and Kahn's rough vocal style most of the songs on Epiphany In Brooklyn don't offer the kind of sing-along melodies that pop radio loves. The album is carried instead by harmony, texture and lyrics.

Although partially mismatched, Epiphany In Brooklyn has a certain charm that's hard to describe. Maybe it's the way Kahn sounds so helpless sometimes, or maybe just the way she blares the word "frustration" in the middle of "My Lover." The album could be done better, but it's a fairly good start for yet another budding and disenchanted songwriter from New York.

Bob Dylan
"As Good As I've Been To You"
Columbia

As Dylan enters the third decade of his career, his latest effort finds the legend once again reinventing himself. As Good As I've Been to You is an album of traditional folk songs. Gone are the guest stars and electric guitars. Dylan cut the stripped-down album alone, with only his sparse acoustic guitar and harmonica accompanying his ballads.

Instead of the cheesy slow songs that metal bands claim are "ballads," Dylan reminds us of the traditional meaning of ballads - songs that tell a story. The lyrics here are all folktales, from the tragedy of "Frankie and Albert" to the children's verse of "Froggie Went A' Courtin'." Only three of the thirteen songs are Dylan originals, as they blend in well with the chestnuts he introduces to a new audience. His "You're Gonna Quit Me" sounds as if it could be an old Leadbelly song.

But Dylan's voice has slipped into self-parody. His nasal whine sounds more like Buckwheat from the Little Rascals. Still, he is Bob Dylan. And on songs such as the bluesy "Sittin' on Top of the World" and the great "Little Maggie," his style pays tribute to his original influence Woody Guthrie. On As Good As I've Been to You, Dylan gives his audience yet another chapter from a long tale and shows he has not forgotten from which he came.

Dante's Grin
"Funny Clowny Lady"
Sticky Hippos, Ltd.

Dante's Grin has never been content with being a normal local rock band. Continuously the band members make it a special point to revel in their own individuality, influences and obscure non-musical talents. Besides collectively forming a crack alternative band destined for success, the four smiling faces excel in several diverse fields that include cooking, abstract painting, poetry writing and the scholarly pursuit of long dead Boston bands (several of which they've been in). Keeping all this in mind it's no surprise that the band's new independent release, Funny Clowny Lady, is just one more example of how they continuously skirt the norm - for better or for worse.

Labeled as an EP with fourteen or fifteen bonus tracks, the CD begins with a strong four song core before slowly meandering halfway between stupidity and brilliance. Those initial four songs ("Bodies", "Hippy Money", "Trees" and "Phono Homo") are done up in typical Dante's Grin fashion. Mikail Kysiak's pounding bass, Aaron Tap's droning guitar, combined with Chad MacDonald's drum beat, then layered with Brendan Murray's analytical, yet youthful vocals yields a dense mass of sound that hovers around the soul of Dante's Grin.

But then there's the other side of the band. The soft, acoustic side that materializes on songs like the harmonized "Lady Lady" and the acoustic version of "Phono Homo" which both lie safely nestled within the bonus tracks of Funny Clowny Lady. The album is hard to digest on the first few listenings (especially the marathon "Drain In Vain" - an experiment with timing and kitchen percussion - and its remix), and may require some creative CD player programming or careful scrutiny of the optional liner notes (available by mail) at first. But don't despair - later listening missions eventually turn into treasure hunts for pop gems and almost all intrepid explorers can find something worth keeping.

"Samuel Barber: Symphony No. 1; Overture to The School for Scandal; Music for a Scene from Shelley; Two Essays for Orchestra; Adagio for Strings"
Baltimore Symphony
David Zinman, Conductor
Argo

Mention the name Samuel Barber and the ubiquitous Adagio comes immediately to mind, but most people know nothing of his other works. As of late, the climate has been changing; Leonard Slatkin's recording of the symphony with St. Louis (paired with the piano concerto) was a 1991 Grammy winner. As good as Slatkin's reading may be, he missed some of its poetry. Zinman gets closer to the mark; the peppery syncopation in the scherzo, for example, comes across with crisper definition, conveying more of its essential jauntiness. Zinman and Baltimore are in fine command of the shorter works on this program as well, though Yoel Levi and the Atlanta Symphony do quite well with them on their recent Barber program on Telarc. And Sylvia McNair's probing account of Barber's dreamscape, Knoxville: Summer of 1915, is reason alone to own Atlanta's Barber program. Though there is some duplication of material between the two, getting both would hardly be excessive.

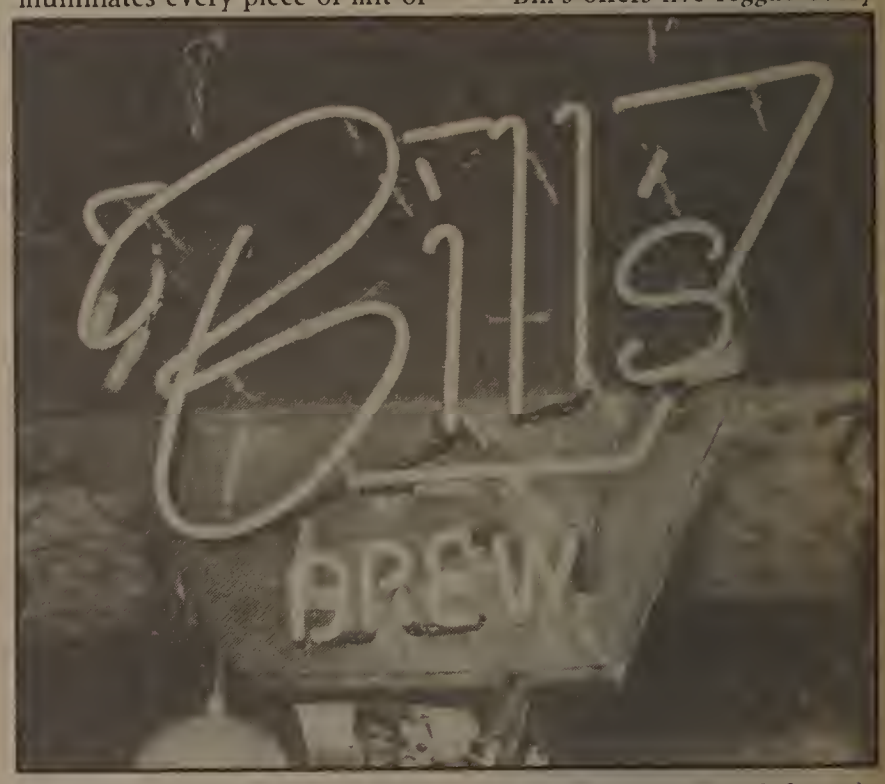
BARS & CLUBS

SUNDAY NIGHT REGGAE AT BILL'S BAR

BY LAUREN DARE



Bill's Bar, yet another satellite of nightclub owners Pat and John Lyons, is so cool. The doormen are cool, the bartenders are cool, the clientele is cool. It is very cool. And when Bill's does a live reggae show on Sundays, everyone is very cool and laid back, mon. They are so cool that I, Lauren Dare, was almost convinced that I was not cool. I had remembered (for once) to brush my hair, but unfortunately had left my black leather motorcycle jacket at home, a fashion faux pas which I will not soon commit again. For a four dollar cover (a bargain basement price to see a live band), you too can rub shoulders with the cool people. Now, to say that Bill's is cool is not to say that it has an attitude; certainly not like Axis down the street, where they won't let you in if you're wearing beige. (Not, you understand, that I would ever be caught dead wearing beige myself.) Bill's is more like a neighborhood bar where everyone in the neighborhood is in a band.

Sunday nights, however, tend to draw a more diverse crowd at Bill's. There is an abundance of black leather and combat boots, a strong showing from the dreadlock contingent and the inevitable collegiate crowd (of the "I went to Jamaica for Spring Break once" variety) who now think that everything is very Irie, Mon. My favorite look came from a guy who had shaved his entire head except for a little mop at the top (which was dreadlocked), and he had on these little round glasses which made him look like one of the Muppets. In general, everyone is sort of studiedly casual; you know they probably spent a long time getting their looks just right, but they wouldn't want anyone to know, because a big part of being really cool is you have to make it look like it just comes naturally.

BILL'S BAR

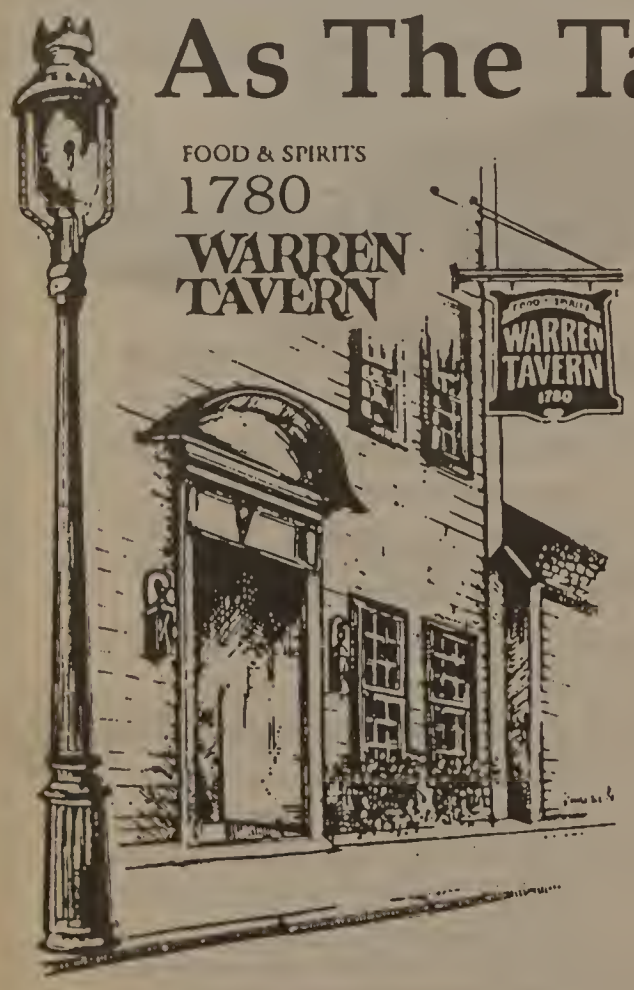
The music was very loud, causing people to make absurd pantomime gestures in the hopes of communicating their beverage needs to the bartenders. Since I hate to look absurd, my friend and I fought our way right up to the bar and then clung tenaciously to our spots, so that we could order our drinks with a minimum of screaming. Conversation was out of the question, but when everyone is so cool, there's really nothing to say anyway. So we all just stood around, swinging our heads and bobbing - doing the "reggae dance." I'm sure you know what I mean when I say the "reggae dance": the beat of most reggae songs is so slow, that you look foolish actually moving your feet to dance, so you stand with your feet in one spot, while swaying your upper body and bobbing your head with the rhythm. When a roomful of people does this at the same time, it looks like a weird cult occurrence. The music was excellent, though, and it was worth looking like a reggae moonie to join the crowd in dancing, which I did, briefly.



Before Last-Call (1:45 AM) I had to make my obligatory trip to the bathroom. First I negotiated a black-lit ramp which (since you're wearing black of course) illuminates every piece of lint or dandruff you have ever collected in life, revealing itself on your body in harsh, purpley detail. Fortunately, the light in the bathroom is not as ferocious. Since Bill's is such a cool place, it's only natural that they have a condom dispenser in there, but my suspicion was that everyone in the bar was too cool to even have sex, so I don't know how much use it gets. I certainly didn't need to make use of it, but maybe, if I wear my motorcycle jacket next time, who knows?

Angela Woolridge

Bill's offers live reggae every Sunday night and is definitely worth the four dollar cover. It is a great place to go for a very cool night out, but don't count on lighting any passion fires unless you're wearing some black leather. ❑

•CLARKE'S 227-7800, 21 Merchant's Row, Bos. Located just outside of Faneuil Hall, this is a popular meeting place for Boston singles and college students. Clarke's has that old-fashioned saloon appeal that makes it easier to let your guard down. Expect a line on weekends. No cover. Casual dress. Full menu in the restaurant.

•COMMONWEALTH BREWING COMPANY 523-8383, 138 Portland St., Bos. "Let no man thirst for lack of real ale" is the motto at this microbrewery and restaurant featuring glass walls so thirsty patrons can longingly observe the brewing process. The decor consists of copper tables, pipes and beer tanks. Approximately 10 English ales are served on tap as well as "Boston Burton Ale" served frosty cold in the bottle. Close proximity to the Boston Garden translates to before and after game crowds. Live Reggae and Calypso every Friday and Saturday Nite 9:30 to 1:00. Brewery tours are free, but sorry, this isn't the Molson factory. No samples. $3 Cover. Have dinner here and no cover.

•COTTONWOOD CAFE 661-7440, 1815 Mass. Ave., Bos. Open daily for lunch and dinner, this casual yet upscale cafe makes you feel like you've landed in the heart of Arizona. The southwestern cuisine (try the grilled specials) is complemented by the adobe booths and multitude of cacti. Relax in the outdoor cafe during the hot summer months.

•CROSSROADS 262-7371, 495 Beacon Street, Boston. Hailed as one of the last neighborhood pubs in Back Bay, this casual hotspot is frequented by locals, students and young professionals. Among its many attractions are three dart boards, cable sports, a loud jukebox and Guiness on tap. Open 7 days a week 'til 2.

•DAISY BUCHANAN'S 247-8516, 242 Newbury St., Bos. This Newbury St. late night hot spot packs up consistently with singles on the make. A dark and noisy place, where at least one anonymous source has protested the lack of condom dispensers at the bar. More action as the night wears on, this is a great place to be for last call. No cover. Casual dress.

•FROGG LANE BAR & GRILL 720-0610, 245 Faneuil Hall Mktpl., Bos. At this large Faneuil Hall patio bar, the crowd is a mix of tourists and locals. Lofted above the crowd in Faneuil Hall, Frogg Lane offers a mixed menu of American and Mexican fare. No cover or dress code. Jukebox for indoor entertainment.

•GREEN BRIAR 789-4100, 304-306 Washington St., Brighton. This neighborhood Irish pub in the heart of Washington Square has the best combination of the Celtic feel far from the parking mess of Government Center. Entertainment ranges from Irish music to the occasional progressive band. The crowd is a healthy mix of neighborhood folk and recent college graduates. Modest cover on weekends. Casual dress.

•HARPER'S FERRY 254-9743, 158 Brighton Ave., Allston. Perhaps Boston's best known R & B bar, Harpers offers live music nightly. Most of the bands are top local blues acts, but on Sun. the amateurs take over with open-mike night. Smoky but lots of fun with darts and billiards and a large dance floor. Moderate cover varies depending on the act. Collared shirts are required.

•LENOX PUB & GRILLE 536-5300, 710 Boylston St., Bos. Enjoy casual dining and an extensive array of imported and domestic beers in an authentic British pub. Attracts an older, quieter crowd. No cover. Neat dress. Sun. brunch 11:30am-2:30pm.

•LILY'S 720-5580, 101 S. Market Faneuil Hall Mktpl., Bos. The tourists have found a good deal at this cafe/piano bar where one can sample quality cheap eats and listen to piano Fri.-Sat. nights. No cover or dress code.

•THE LITTLEST BAR 523-9766, 47 Province, Boston. Located near Downtown Crossing. A quick walk from the Orpheum Theatre. As its name implies, The Littlest Bar is quite little. In fact, the place only seats 17 people. Guinness and Rolling Rock are among the beers served on tap. Edibles also served. Hours are from 8:30am-12am Weekdays and Saturdays.

•LUCKY JOHNNY'S 731-6753, 1098 Comm. Ave., Boston. Classic Rock rhythms fill the air at this upbeat college bar frequented mostly by BU, BC and Pine Manor students. On weekends, it gets pretty crowded. So beat the lines and get there early. The barback grill is always open and the smaller underground lounge is a nice place to chat. Dress is a relaxed casual to somewhat dressy. Best of all, there's never a cover.

•MARKETPLACE CAFE 227-9660, 300 Faneuil Hall Mkt., Boston. In a comfortable, relaxed area in Faneuil Hall, sit back and listen to the great sounds of the Brian Walkley Band with special guest Bruce Bartlett every Thursday at 8:30pm. "Street Magic" acapella every Wednesday at at 8:30. Casual atmosphere and dress.

•NIGHTSTAGE 497-8200, 823 Main St., Camb. An intimate, well laid-out club with a seating capacity of just 250. National and well known local acts. Blues, Rock, Zydeco, Jazz, Folk and Country are propelled by a sound system that will blast you comfortably to the outer limits of space and back. One of Boston's best up-close-and-personal clubs. Casual dress. Call Ticketron 931-2000 for ticket info.

•PARADISE ROCK CLUB 254-2052, 967 Comm. Ave., Bos. One of Boston's best live clubs. Inside, you'll find one of the last of the small stages which still attracts national and international acts. Cover varies from moderate to heavy. Dress is casual. Dancing on non-band nights. For show tickets, call Ticketmaster at 931-2000. Minimum age varies by show.

•PERRY'S 367-1297, 199 State St., Boston. Upstairs young professionals follow their favorite teams on six TV screens. While downstairs, college students and young professionals dance the night away Wed.-Sat. Located in the Faneuil Hall area, the dress is casual and the popcorn is excellent! Lunch and dinner served 11:30am-11pm.

•RATHSKELLER 536-2750, 526 Comm. Ave., Kenmore Sq., Bos. Affectionately known as the Rat, this is a rock club with staying power. Past headliners have included the Police, 10,000 Maniacs and R.E.M. The Rat attracts a hardcore alternative crowd - lots of black clothes and biker jackets. No cover upstairs. Varies downstairs. No dress code.

• RED HAT 523-2175, 9 Bowdoin St., Bos. You'll feel just like you're in a London pub. Dark and casual atmosphere. Attracts young professionals and Beacon Hill residents. No cover. Casual dress. One of the few places you can still get pitchers of mixed drinks.

•RYLE'S JAZZ CLUB 876-9330, 212 Hampshire St., Camb. If you're a Jazz fan, don't miss Ryles. Downstairs you'll find an older crowd listening to traditional Jazz music. Upstairs is funkier with talented fusion musicians. Feel free to move between floors. Cover varies from moderate to heavy. Casual dress.

•SCULLERS LOUNGE 783-0811, 400 Soldiers Field Rd., Camb. Renowned Jazz singers entertain here nightly. The bar is well stocked, the chairs are comfortable and the walls are paneled, evoking a mellow mood. The nighttime view of the Charles adds an air of romance. Heavy cover. Casual dress but no jeans or sneakers.

•T'S PUB 254-0807, 973 Comm. Ave., Boston. Great food, lively atmosphere and there's always something going on inside. Younger bar-hoppers beware: Only Valid ID's accepted (they're really tough!). Lunches and dinners are delicious and reasonably priced. College and thirtysomething crowd. Never a cover but always a good time.

•THE BARMUDA TRIANGLE 437-1011, 200 Brookline Avenue, Boston. Located just outside of Kenmore Square, The Triangle features live music seven nights a week. Catch Boston's best Jazz early in the week, and kick up your heels to Latin, R&B, Reggae and Rock through the weekends. Full bar. Reasonable entertainment charge after 9:30. Weekly giveaways include free passes, round trip tickets to Bermuda, T-shirts, parties and more!

•WALLY'S 424-1408, 427 Mass. Ave., Bos. Treat yourself to unadulterated Jazz nightly at Wally's. Neatly tucked away on Mass. Ave. not far from Northeastern U., Wally's is easy to miss. The only indication that you've arrived is a small white beer sign out front. The atmosphere is dark, smoky and crowded and above all authentic. Mon. is Blues night. No cover. Casual dress. Arrive early to get a seat.

•WARREN TAVERN 241-8142, 2 Pleasant St., Boston. A funky little bar whose clientiele includes young professionals & athletes. Reputedly having some of the most beautiful women in Boston.The bar now attracts manly athletes. Stars don't mind hanging out at the tavern because no one bothers them. TV is always on for sports. No tank tops. Bring I.D. Please don't drink and drive.

•WESTERN FRONT 492-7772, 343 Western Ave., Camb. A multicultural Reggae and Jazz bar where it's difficult not to get caught up in the rasta spirit. It's dark and dingy inside, but the place sparks alive when the bands take the stage. Cover varies from moderate to heavy. On Sunday nights, visit the Arts Café and enjoy music, comedy, performance art and poetry for only $5. Casual dress.

Zachary's Human Feel

IMPROPER IMPERSONALS

Feel the urge to unleash your frustrations or vent your hostilities on an unsuspecting friend or enemy? Look no further than the Improper Impersonals, a forum designed for pranksters, irate neighbors, relatives, maniacs or any would-be target of your acid tongue. Best of all they're FREE! Send your Impersonals to us at Improper Impersonals, The Improper Bostonian, 17 Station St., Suite 7A, Brookline, MA 02146. Or fax it to us at 232-4305.

Margaret,
Thanks for saying "Saved by the bell" to your son when my first pregnancy died. You said it so loud I could hear you through the phone across the room. Some day, maybe you can learn the difference between snideness and wit. Maybe you could take a class in human feeling in the meantime. I'm glad not to have given my baby such a heartless monster for a grandmother.
Your (in title only) Daughter-In-Law, Lia

Charlie, Joey, Jackie and Rosy,
You guys are the best! Thanks for keeping this old, tired lady warm at night. I promise that Santa will be good to all of you this year.
Love, Mom

Stevie,
Remember last night when you said you were glad to have me as a houseguest? And remember how happy you were to have that new couch? Well, I'm not leaving.
Artie

Hey Juicy,
If you spent less time on the phone and more time on Personal Hygiene, our neighborhood would be better off. Get a life!
Not me

To ARW from LZM,
I'm finally free - are you?

To my slimy ex-landlord,
See you in court. Thjis is not Judge Wapner or Rusty - This is real and I'm getting my money back.
Guess Who?

Jon,
You're a sick and mentally ailing human being. You're sick, sick, sick.
-Almost as sick.

Hehhver,
Rill you help me tie my shoes and learn to walk. Duhhhh!
Brahbreey

To The Ashamed Canadian Fan,
"Nice Goalie"
-YooHoo

Lori,
It's storm season! Sleet, snow, flu's, colds fevers, freezing to death etc...Are you happy?
Your pal

To Sharon,
Your beautiful daughter has the greatest, most devoted father. She's crazy about him. So why don't you give her a break and let her see him?
Dad
P.S. She'll always have my nose - Eat your heart out.

Raymond,
I came home to an empty bed for the last time last night. Stay the hell out of my life

Sugar Lips,
Put on the silk blue number I got you, get in bed and wait. for me. I'll have more instructions for you when I get home. Get ready to scream.
H-Man

Betty,
You walked out the door. You said you were never coming back. Well, I don't care because it's your house. Enjoy life on the street. (Remember, It's impolite to take a dump on the sidewalk without a pooper scooper)
The Drooler

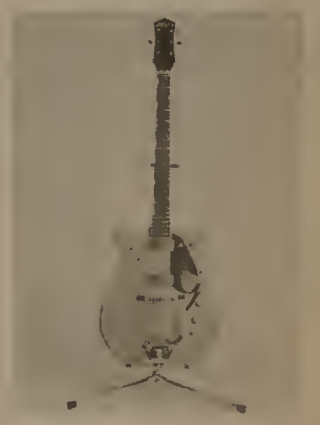
Carol,
It doesn't matter that you were having you "time" because nothing will ever convince me that it's o.k. to not inform your diners that their "snack" may be a little bloody.
Ask Anne Landers.
Strawberry Shake Man

Roberta,
You kept asking me why I wanted a divorce. You said I wouldn't communicate with you. Isn't 14 day periods and 21-day cycles enough of a reason.
Ex-hubby
P.s. I didn'y know that Eveready made tampons.

Angel,
Making love to you reminds me of my summers fishing with my dad in Bar Harbor as a kid.
Rectum (damn near killed him)

Amy,
I finally figured out how come you never let me know whem you were having an orgasm. I was never home at the time.
Limp

Martha,
Now I now why I'm not attracted to men anymore. What you did to me with the curling iron and Hershey's syrup was enough not only to heat up my already pulsating and volcano-like oven, but it made me feel alive again (like I was a little girl). Except now, every time I fix my hair, I can only think about one thing.
Your Bondage Slave, Trisha



Robert B.,
When I complimented you on your cover I was only being polite. Are you familiar with that word? You say we're destined for oblivion. Could you tell us what that's like? Heard you've been there from the start.
H-Man.
P.S. Stuff it!

Blondy,
You were at the corner of Beacon and Dartmouth. I was walking my golden retriever. I'm embarrassed, but you should know that I followed you home and yes, that was me with the bag over my head staring in your back patio window with my hand doing the nasty.
Paul R.

If you keep doing things like forgetting photos, you wont survive the nibbling and wont get a free dinner.

The rest of the FLT,
You idiots went to D-town drunk out of your minds?!! Nice move. Just don't blame me when the six toed beast from hell comes knocking.
-D

Nic,
You bloodsucking freak. If I ever get my hands on you, you're dust! Give me back the OBJECT or you wont live to see the moon. -EFB

Our Bodies, Redux

Twenty years after the publication of the groundbreaking book Our Bodies, Ourselves (which covers all aspects of women's health and was written by the Boston Women's health collective), the updated version is here, and there are plenty of new things under the sexual sun since the 1970's edition: AIDS (women are nearly 10 times more likely to be infected by a male partner than vice versa; the book calls women — especially women of color — "the invisible face of AIDS"), Norplant and the Female Condom, the abortion pill, mastectomy, Chronic Fatigue Syndrome and Environmental Illness. Not to mention harassment and abuse. Like the earlier one, this book combines an underlying agenda and tone, of political anger with a comforting, informal, calmly factual woman-to-woman voice, rather like a sewing bee of suffragettes. The numerous writers explicitly indict the male medical establishment (though of course there are many more women doctors now than there were in the 70's) while seeking to redress misinformation, disrespectful treatment of women, and the overly absolutist and hierarchical attitudes which some doctors strike. Each chapter is a good read, a rather easy hammock swing among possible alternatives in any given matter, sprinkled with friendly italicized quotes that personalize the medical and social experiences of many women. The key word is "We," used throughout the book so that, say, a heterosexual reading the lesbian chapter can tune into the intimacy and ease that these women feel talking among themselves.

Scarfing Up Hermes

This pristinely classy shop wafts its Parisian ethos across the seas and, more provincially, across the Boston Garden from the Ritz. This is the sort of place where way- upper-stocking stuffers have the stature , and the price tag, of real presents. Most famously, it's the home of the Hermes scarf-and why shouldn't they cost $225? they're brilliantly colored and complexly patterned, they're enormous (36 inches square) and are made of silk twill using 39 separate silk screens. The edges are hand-rolled. Their styles come in equestrian, floral , and novelty themes and ,in a special rhythm , 6 new patterns come along twice a year and yearly 12 'classic' ones make their reappearance. Very appealing pleated scarves are on display in plump little brioche-shaped bundles, slightly more expensive. Another treat is their tiny little rolled leather notebooks with waterproof paper (you've fallen off the yacht, apparently, and need to pen an SOS) for $275, or you could get a desk agenda in ostrich or lizard, or a fancy leather container for your prosaic office Post-It Notes. Mini-mini purses , about the size of a little wallet, invite the purification of transportable matter .If you're looking for a wedding present there are occasional colorful plates, teapots, and whimsical things like toucan-shaped salts and peppers. They offer a pattern of flatware that resembles thickly bundled sheaves of wheat. A tassled key chain, a silver flask, horse-headed scissors—all costing Don't Ask-would be the little gems of a Gatsby Christmas. Most luxurious, and even practical are the enormous thick beach towels in heavy terry, one has a leopard on it, another echoes one of the scarves; because they cost $425, the monogram costs no extra.

Bubble, Bubble Toil and a Cup of Liquid Joy

It's tempting to compare this backyard production to an elephant condom, but it's really a gigantic bubble that you throw - rather than blow - cause it's so big. Sold in an explanatory brochure that's actually a book, the hardware is simply some plastic, and a giant loop made of webbing that replicates the little wand of indoor bubble-blowers. You add the water, detergent and glycerin for stiffening. After dipping the contraption in a bucket of soapy water, you simply open the webbing loop, and turn sideways to unleash a huge, colorful, lolloping, plasticky-looking, tube-shaped living thing that will wow young and old alike. It's a rainbow-catcher and presents shifting colors as light waves dance around on the inside; before popping though, an ominous black band appears near the bubble's top. This multifarious toy diversifies endlessly, throwing bubbles through a plastic six-pack holder, a coathanger, tin cans, even two bare hands. Anything can become the loop. Whizkids in the bubble field make things like a smoke-filled pentagonal prism, and all sorts of wackos worldwide multiply the possibilities. Fun science can be learned by perusing the book while Dad in the backyard foments crazy quality time.

14 Dr. Leonardo Da Vinci

Even back in the 15th century, artists like Leonardo da Vinci were investigating the inner workings of the human body. The Museum of Fine Arts hosts 200 sheets from da Vinci's anatomical notebooks which reveal a fascinating chronology from the artist's life.

AROUND TOWN

Ice hockey may be bloodier, polo may be more complicated, but for pure, hard-to-follow guts and glory you must turn to lacrosse. Luckily enough, in Beantown you can, because we have the Boston Blazers Lacrosse League. Their home opener hits the Boston Garden on Jânuary 22 where they will wage war against the Philadelphia Wings. If you can't make this game, there's always the rest of the season. The Blazers play on January 22, January 30, February 27 and March 13, 1993. Tickets are $10, $15 and $17, available through the Boston Garden Box Office at 227-3206.

It seems impossible that 15 years have passed since the first of the Star Wars Trilogy burst onto the big screen, connecting us forever to characters with names like Jabba, Chewbacca and C-3PO. And now, when you least expected it, these Sci Fi thrillers are back, gracing the Wang Center's 60 x 23-foot screen on Saturday, January 9 and Sunday, January 10. Brand new prints of all three films - Star Wars, The Empire Strikes Back and Return of the Jedi - will be shown in a weekend-long movie marathon, part of the Herald Classic Film Series. As if you needed more motivation, proceeds from this event go to aid the Wang Center's educational outreach program, Young at Arts. The Trilogy begins at noon each day with an intermission after each film. Tickets are $10, and are available through the Wang Center Box Office and Ticketmaster outlets. Call 931-ARTS (931-2787) for more info.

Romance, romance and, oh yes, more romance are what you can expect from the latest Andrew Lloyd Webber theater production, titled "Aspects of Love." Playing at the Colonial Theater, 106 Boylston Street, from January 19-24 only, this musical comes straight to us from London, and from the creator of such hits as "Cats," "Evita" and "The Phantom of the Opera." Performances run Tuesday through Saturday nights at 8 p.m., Sunday evenings at 7 p.m. and matinees on Saturday and Sunday at 2p.m. Tickets are $35-$60. Call 426-6444 for ticket information.

If you felt bereft because you missed the last dance bash at the Roxy, Boston's most glamorous ballroom, rejoice. You get a second chance to dance the night away at the New Year's Eve Roxy Revisited. The event takes place (surprise!) on December 31 and will include all the Roxy's finest tricks, including the White Heat Swing Orchestra, Neicey Boswell and, of course, those zany Roxy Dancers. The event starts at 8 p.m. with a light buffet, followed by D.J.-inspired dance-mania and will be highlighted by an indoor pyrotechnics display at midnight. The cost of participating in this gala, which lasts until 2 a.m., is a mere $37.50. Call 227-ROXY (227-7699) for tickets or information.

Yoshi Takata

Feeling culturally deprived? Or maybe you've just been wondering what Fashion Impresario Pierre Cardin has been up to these days? Well, let us suggest a divine way to take care of both these nagging issues: go to The French Library, 53 Marlborough Street, to see Mr. Cardin host the opening of "The Present of the Past," an exhibition of photographs by Yoshi Takata. The opening, which is free, takes place on January 5, from 5 to 7 p.m. Don't panic if you miss the opening. The exhibit lasts as long as January does. Call 266-4351 for more info.

First Night

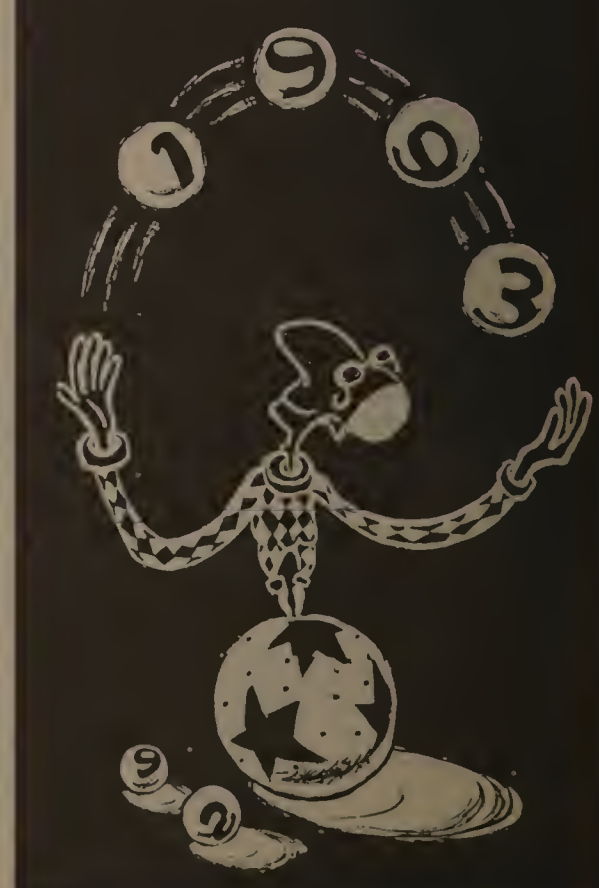
BY AMY RUTH LEVINE

Celebrations on the last night of the year often carry the unspoken obligation that they shall last well into New Year's morning. First Night, Boston's annual New Year's Eve arts celebration, was designed to smear the old langsyne adage. It favors natural intoxication by music, dance, and togetherness and the inhalation of only brisk gusts of winter-night air.

Ninety-one cities around the world will assemble their own cast of New Year's revelers to rejoice over another revolution of the Earth around the sun, and Boston, the founding city of the 17-year-old tradition, plans to incorporate political correctness into its repertoire of attractions. Throughout greater Boston's theaters, dance halls, plazas, waterfront, storefronts and museums, First Night-goers wearing $7 entrance pins will be able to enjoy a multitude of attractions. This year's theme, "Focus on the Environment," will be worked into many of the 150 routines and performances of over 1,000 of Boston's artists.

Cycle, ReCycle, LifeCycle are not only common terms thrown into many an ambitious New Year's resolution, they comprise the title for a City Hall Plaza installation made of 120 old bicycles by Michio Ihara, Caryn Johnson, and John Tagiuri. The public will be invited to light up balloons attached to the sculpture by pedaling on its stationary bikes. A ranch house made of recycled materials used by the average American family will also sit at the plaza.

Zeren Earls, the First Night president, hopes to send a trilogy of messages to the participants in Boston's event. "Time passages, looking into the future, and multiculturalism are the ongoing themes of First Night," she said.



This year, the First Night crew are making a special effort to showcase the many different cultures in Boston's "salad bowl" of ethnicities. Programs scheduled for the evening will highlight the customs and styles of a host of Boston's communities.

To be held at the Wang Center for the Performing Arts, "One Land: The Spirit Continues—How Cultures Celebrate Themselves," is a showcase of America's diverse heritage featuring the International Theatre Company and its triple crown program of Caribbean, Chinese, and Irish cultural talent, the brainchild of Naheem Allah. Each group has been invited to recreate an annual festival on the Wang stage. "How many rich celebrations happen in Boston that are unknown to others?" asks Grey Johnson, the company's director. Caribbean-American participants from their Carnival Day Association will dance their annual August festival, a contest to find a king and queen judged on music, costumes and dancing. Chinese-American performers will recreate their Chinese New Year festival dragon and lion dance. The Eastern U.S. Kung Fu Federation will bring its 110 foot dragon and its large lion to the stage. Irish-Americans will recreate their Irish Wren Festival, the Comhaltas Ceoltoiri Eireann (an age old traditional parade and dance performed to raise money to bury the king, represented by a wren). With songs and dances choreographed specifically for First Night, Naheem Allah's performers will tell the story of each festival, acting as tour guides for how cultures celebrate themselves. They will also tell of the difficulties of diverse communities living side by side in a competitive world. (7:15 and 9:15 p.m.)

Besides having the opportunity to mix with cultural groups other than their own, spectators may have their first chance to sit inside some of Boston's most beautiful and historical performing arts centers — for the mere price of the pin. "The event has a populist feeling to it," Johnson said.

Days before the big night, scaffolding for environmental works will appear in unexpected places and practicing artists will populate the streets. All the preparations lead up to the Grand Procession at 5:30 p.m. on Dec. 31, with a walk up Boylston Street from the Hynes Convention Center to the Boston Common. "It really grows as it moves," said Earls, who was careful to point out that First Night goers are welcome and encouraged to join the procession. Musicians playing Dixieland jazz will accompany the strollers as stiltwalkers and unicyclists weave in and out of the crowd. Jamaica Plain youths will wear the masks they made from natural materials to bring their neighborhood portrait to the Back Bay. Fancifully dressed volunteers will hand out bells to add to the din.

Throughout the day prior to the Procession, artists will carve fantastical sculptures from 83 tons of ice blocks that will be illuminated by nightfall. The youth of Orchard Park's Neighborhood House will carve an ice sculpture into a painted mural about the trials of teens living with violence. South and Lower Roxbury teens will create a sculpture of recycled materials.

To further encourage the mingling of different cultures and celebrate the importance of maintaining cultural identity, the Institute of Contemporary Art will host the Stone Soup Poets of Boston. They will showcase the poetry of 12 nations, in "Boston as an International City: A Literary Celebration." Poets from Bulgaria, China, Haiti, Ireland, Japan, Nigeria, Puerto Rico, Russia, Vietnam, Zaire and Australia will first present their poems in their native tongue and the Stone Soup Poets will translate them in English. The poems' themes will center around the positive aspects of the human condition and the importance of language. "Despite how solitary the creative process is," said poetry curator Jack Powers, "we unify ourselves with the community around us." (7 to 11 p.m.)

As the First Night themes proclaim, a taste of the future is appropriate. "Van Gogo," a robot that paints and synthesizes music will be on display in the Hynes Convention Center from 2 p.m. to nightfall. This robot, created by Tim Anderson of MIT, is actually an easel connected to a computer that uses a series of probability curves to command arms with pulleys and threads to paint. It also controls a separate music synthesizer. "It gives the illusion that something very complex is going on," Anderson said. Observers say it resembles an angst-ridden artist as it paints, perhaps the origin of its name. Why did Anderson create it? "Well, it is impossible for a person to paint something that is totally meaningless," he said.

The best way to prepare for First Night is to purchase a pin at Au Bon Pain, CVS, Fleet Banks, Old Town Trolley, Papa Gino's, Star Market, Store 24, or Videosmith. In the past, First Night has sold half of its buttons on Dec. 31, so to avoid the rush and the $10 fee after Dec. 25, make plans early. Pins will not be available at performance sites on December 31. There will be plenty of food vendors and most restaurants will be open until 11 p.m. Make sure you have a sturdy rain coat and woolens. Nothing can keep the New Year from coming, and regardless of the weather, the reveling will go on.

The evening's activities will culminate at Boston's waterfront for a countdown to the Custom House Tower clock's striking of midnight. But if you just can't imagine ushering in the New Year without a toast of champagne, take cover first. No public consumption of alcohol is permitted.

A HOLIDAY SURVIVAL GUIDE

BY CHAD L. SANDBORN

Passing through Christmas and on out the butt-end of 1992, we once again gird ourselves for the requisite annual orgy of family activities. Though 1992 will be remembered fondly as The Year Of (among other things) The Woman, The Fallen Windsors and The Canadian World Series Champs, it will most blatantly stand out in our memory as The Year of Family Values.

Spurred on by such presidential lunacy as a running dialogue between our vice president and a real sitcom character, the past year finally shed an open, honest light on the concept of the traditional family. Appropriately then, in the last shimmering rays of 1992, we can finally come to see our own families in a more realistic light. We now have the freedom to redefine traditional family values in real world terms.

Social decorum once forced us to blindly regard family as merely the people who loved and raised us. But the darkness has lifted. We now realize a family also doubles as a well-stocked bag of props, providing just enough shenanigans to help us through the holiday family gatherings.

Before moving on to the holiday survival tips, let's familiarize ourselves with the props. In the honesty-laden

First Night

"The passing of traditions from one generation to the next is the cornerstone of a family, Feel free to follow Dad's lead and start drinking early."

times of 1992, each of us must confront our family for just what it portends to be dysfunctional.

There, slouched in front of the football game is dear old dad. Lovingly violent, he likes beer and lots of it. He also likes to smack around mom, who's clanging around in the kitchen. Once an irritating combination of mousy anal-retentiveness, she's aged into an endearing nit-picker who can take a punch. Mom is preparing a Christmas turkey, assisted by her fat sister (your aunt), who's not much help at all because she refuses to uncradle her quivering Chihuahua.

Your fat aunt's husband is in the back yard, talking over the fence with the neighbor kids. Keep an eye on him. After all, he's the uncle who cornered you in the workshed one Christmas when you were a child, suggesting you two play the "Find-The-Piece-Of-Candy-Hidden-On-My-Body" game. You declined, even though he promised discretion, keeping it "our little secret."

He may have possibly played this game with your sister. This would explain a few things. She's either rebelled into a rabid fundamentalist or a fun-loving biker mama, adorned with homemade blue tattoos on hairy forearms. She's sitting by the phone waiting for your Deadhead brother to make his annual call from prison. She needs to ask him a question. Either, "Have you accepted Jesus Christ as your savior?" or "What do you need smuggled in on my next visit?"

If all this seems rather sad, well it is. Also remember, that in America, we've doubled our portions of family values. Almost 50 percent of us are children of divorced parents. As parents age, they get lonelier and less particular. When they remarry, you inherit a new pseudo-parent and their similarly dysfunctional family. If all goes well, you get to spend half a holiday with Mom, her latest lifemate and his white-trash kin — only to spend the other half with Dad, his young laptop wife and any of her relatives who can stand your Dad.

In short, too much food, too much family.

But in these days, it doesn't take much to turn negatives into positives, people into props. Furthermore, most of the survival tips that follow are nondenominational. They work for Christmas, Hanukkah, Kwanza, Winter Solstice celebrations, and any family gatherings (because neither the family nor the occasion for the get-together can prevent the fight that always lurks behind the Lazy-Boy recliner. You may as well apply a little heat and draw it to the surface.

The passing of traditions from one generation to the next is the cornerstone of a family, Feel free to follow Dad's lead and start drinking early. This is a facilitator or a lubricant for the ensuing events of the day.

Fill a plastic 32 oz., Store 24 cup with beer, vodka, grain alcohol or what have you, then cover it with the non-spill lid. This way nosy relatives can't see exactly what you're drinking, though they'll smell it on your breath. And when you knock it over — and you will knock it over, probably before dinner — you won't lose a drop. Plus nothing inebriates quicker than vacuuming booze through a straw.

When you're sufficiently buzzed, start in on your relatives. Silently teeter about the house for a while. Once you've spotted suitable prey — the fat aunt and her dog for instance — stumble up and inquire, "How long are you?" She'll have to think about this for a while. As she attempts to divine your meaning and ponders an appropriate answer, move in close and tight to her round face, buttonholing the wide collar of her Rayon blouse. Ask for money.

Maybe she coughs up some hush money, maybe not. The odds are in your favor though, as this time of year masquerades as the season of giving. Of course, you are required to come bearing gifts as well.

Some families — usually large, poor families — play gift bingo. Each relative draws another relative's name from a spittoon. The upside is you only have to buy a single gift. On the downside, you owe that gift to a relative, like or loathe them. Still other families just demand everyone buy something for everyone else. Although this method guarantees you will be showered with gifts, it usually forces you to bounce several checks in the name of love (being that it's thicker than credit).

Regardless of whether your family is poor (and plays the gift bingo game) or greedy (opting for the Trump-style holiday), you should only give practical, inexpensive gifts. That is, office supplies easily stolen from your employer. And why not? The Scrooge, who will never miss the supplies anyway, ungraciously failed to wish you holiday tidings in the form of a year end bonus, before whisking his spoiled, but just as dysfunctional, family away for some Christmas skiing in Jackson Hole, Wyoming. Besides, nothing says "I love you" quite like staples, cheap pens and paper clips. Not even Frankincense and Merv.

Finding gifts for children, however is another matter. Year round, children are nothing but tools for revenge, and the holidays are no exception. Give any kid one of those noisy, two-wheeled dome toys, the plastic ones filled with small colored balls that make an annoying popping sound when pushed by some snot-nosed rug monkey, and revenge is yours.

Where gifts are given, food is often consumed. Almost more fun than eating food is playing with it. Especially if you've been drinking (and you have). Barge into the kitchen then halt dazedly, pretending to be unsure of your location, name and length. After a confused moment, erupt into giddy elation at the sight of the freshly-cleaned turkey.

Rambling on about a puppet show, jam your hand inside the gutted bird. Ideally, your arm should plunge into the turkey up to the forearm, just like a Mapplethorpe photograph. Bouncing around the kitchen with naked fowl perched on your arm, carry on an Edgar Bergan-Charlie McCarthy conversation. Topics should include any painful, unmentionable skeletons from your family's closet: cousins who haven't been informed they are adopted, secret abortions, extramarital affairs, the hidden candy game, insurance fraud, tax evasion, etc.. Any old dirt will do.

Speaking of Mapplethorpe and closets, family gatherings are always a splendid time for confessions of sexual orientation. If you are homosexual but have yet to let your family in on it, now is as good a time as any. Everyone gathered together, marshaled to support and love you just the way you are. If you're straight, tell them you're gay anyway. And cry. Cry a lot. You'll feel the love well up in the room.

If you're gay and have already fessed up to your family about your lifestyle choice, tell them you're "normal" again. Then let their joy simmer through dinner. Once cleaned dishes have been put away and that missing silver gravy ladle has been located, let them in on the gag. Then fix another drink, sit back and listen to them squawk.

This is what families are all about: a support network that must unconditionally put up with your every grotesque gesture, your every crazed rant.

There are numerous other tricks for making it through family gatherings, the least of which is refusing to show up at all. But what would the holidays be without family? ✳

DRACULA

"Anemic and Unquenching"

Francis Ford Coppola's Dracula, while lushly painted, is anemic. By turning Bram Stoker's vampire into a lover, Coppola has endowed the Count with passion but made him impotent of horror, despite Gary Oldman's superb performance. Winona Ryder (Mina) and Keanu Reeves (Jonathan Harking) provide teen star value; the roles of a Victorian couple are over their heads, and discovering their motivation for their actions is as arduous a task as finding the Count's secret resting place. Anthony Hopkins as Dr. Van Helsing exhibits how to bring imagination and dash to a character, but neither he nor Oldman can give an undead movie life. It's is all Coppola's show, directing for directing's sake, more often obvious and unexciting than the contrary. T.S.L.

THE DISTINGUISHED GENTLEMAN

"Vintage Murphy but Playing It Safe"

Eddie Murphy's career stall doesn't get much of a push with The Distinguished Gentleman, in which he plays a small-time Florida con artist who manages to get elected to the United States Congress. Once in Washington, Murphy realizes he is on the same criminal wavelength as many of his fellow Congressman. The joke here is that any con games or scams the congressmen are pulling are condoned by other congressmen, who are more than willing to look the opther wasy as long as her is something uiin it for them. Even with a sub-plot involving a plucky little gir bald girl, an unfortunate victim of cancer causing power lines, Gentleman fails to convince us that yhere's a rel person underneath that smooth Murphy exterior. This is a blatantly crowd-pleasing film, aimed squarely at whatever fan base Murphy has retained. Gentleman should have been mad 10 years ago when it would have looked like a step ahead rather than a step back. A.L.

UNDER SIEGE

"A Blank Slate"

Ruthless terrorists take over a battleship, and only one man can stop them. . . . Steven Seagal makes a solid attempt to join the A-list of Hollywood action heroes in this big-budget thriller, which plays lot like a horizontal Die Hard, only not as good. It is, however, Seagal's best movie to date, with enough violent deaths and explosions to keep things moving along, although the outcome is never in doubt. Movies of this type are really only as good as their bad guys, and Tommy Lee Jones and Gary Busey, two erstwhile Oscar nominees, are more than adequate for the task - they have enough bad skin and big teeth between them to equip three terrorists. Both overact a bit, but it's a refreshing contrast to the minimalist, shall we say approach to acting taken by Seagal, whose empty visage is not so much a stone face as a blank slate. A.L.

HOME ALONE II

"The True Meaning of Christmas"

Not so much a sequel as a remake, with many of the same gags from the first film repeated intact. Once again, little Kevin is separated from his family at Christmas, and once again he runs afoul of the pair of bumbling bandits whose plans he thwarted when he was first Home Alone. The film's subtitle, "Lost in New York," is doubly misleading.: he isn't really lost, and he isn't really in New York - merely a New York tourist board s candy-coated fantasy of Manhattan (even Times Square looks gleamingly clean and exciting). Kevin is reunited with his family in time for Christmas, of course, and they are thus able to celebrate with true Yuletide spirit, in a two story penthouse atop the Plaza Hotel, with a huge tree, and plenty of presents supplied by a kindly old toy shop owner. Ahhh... God bless us, everyone. A.L.

LEAP OF FAITH

Bound for Mediocrity

Reverend Jonal Nightngale (Steve Martin) is the leader of a touring revivalist minisry that rakes in bucks by virtue of their fraudulent miracles in "Leap of Faith."

BY JONATHAN SARNER

Movie fare designated for the holiday season is expectedly light and life affirming, and although some may bemoan typical, inspirational Hollywood products like It's a Wonderful Life and Miracle on 34th Street as simple-minded, these films are, at least, focused. Leap of Faith, a new film starring Steve Martin and Debra Winger, defies classification by lingering n an identity crisis. It sets out to do a balancing-act, wavering between the inspirational and ironical, which, probably, is designed to appeal to one's divided nature. The former quality speaks to the innocent child residing deep within; the latter to the serious, and sometimes jaded, adult on the surface.

Part of the problem lies in the writing. In seeking to blend the two qualities, screenwriter Janus Cercone robs her script of both. Unfortunately, the irony lacks power owing to the positive inspirational message, and the inspirational uplift stumbles over the irony's lack of sophistication.

To begin with, the lead characters, a conniving traveling evangelist (Martin) and his sidekick (Winger), don't plumb the depths of evil. They're unscrupulous alright, gouging money from hapless victims in exchange for "divine healing," but imprisoned in a script that doesn't allow us to hate them. So as they work a small Kansas town, which is plagued by poverty, unemployment, and drought, we tepidly wonder if the town sheriff (Liam Neeson) will succeed in shutting down their scheme. Martin's character — trenchantly named Jonas Nightengale — provides loads of schtick, in the form of revival meetings. His comic presence, so much a part of his real-life success on the standup circuit, permeates every scene and further impairs our ability to dislike him.

STARRING: STEVE MARTIN
DEBRA WINGER

Likewise, Winger, who becomes romantically drawn to the sheriff, is not allowed to conjure up the raw malevolence necessary to make her look spiritually changed by film's end.

Except for the glitsy and handsomely choreographed sermon scenes, Richard Pearce's directorial style is dry and antiseptic, and limits the human emotions that might otherwise issue from the outcome. (Early on, there is an interminable documentary-style montage of Martin's entourage as they set up their makeshift arena; interestingly, Pearce was a cameraman on Woodstock.)

Still, there are entertaining moments. Martin really knows how to put on a sermon (which he likens to a Broadway musical). He slaps, chops and hits members of his desperate flock who are eagerly waiting to be healed and dons a light-reflecting jacket made of silver tiles; the Holy Spirit radiates from his very being. And it is educational to see how far we've come as a civilization when high-tech collides with the salvation business, as Winger operates a behind-the-scenes control room loaded with camera surveillance equipment and computers, enabling Martin to perform an endless succession of magic tricks.

But sheer entertainment cannot make good on Paramount's claim that this film is a "morality tale." Does the studio mean a modern version of the morality play? Is Paramount trying to dupe us into believing that Martin represents humanity, just as he dupes the townfolk into believing in his authenticity? Otherwise, if what was intended was a simple tale involving an inspirational journey, Faith leaves a lot to be desired. ❑

Forever Young

Sentimental Mel, Lost In Time

BY TIM LEMIRE

The "forever" in Forever Young, the new Mel Gibson movie, may well serve as a description of how long it takes for the movie to arrive at its climax. Gibson is Daniel McCormick, a lovelorn test pilot in the early '40s whose best gal falls into a coma; volunteering for a cryogenics experiment, McCormick is accidentally left frozen until 1992, when he is accidentally unfrozen. A stranger in a strange land, McCormick struggles to find Harry Finley (George Wendt), his scientist buddy and author of the experiment. While taking us on the journey with McCormick, writer Jeffrey Abrams fails to give the sufficient comedy or pathos necessary to keep the engine going; instead of storming along in a B-52 bomber, we're coasting along in a glider.

We've seen the generic "displaced person" in the past or future in Woody Allen's Sleeper and the Back to the Future trilogy, and Forever Young doesn't even begin to explore the comedic potential of McCormick's situation. Handsome Mel looks 32, but he's actually 85! So when McCormick seeks help from an adolescent librarian and she makes a pass at him, we await the punch line from Mel, something like, "I'm probably a bit old for you," but none comes. Instead, we get to see Mel gazing inquisitively at "pump" sneakers, CD's and helicopters. Watching the "Encino Man" adjust to modern society was more entertaining.

Mel Gibson doesn't help to quicken the pace with his deadpan reaction to what's going on around him. You'd think Mel would be in a panic about 1992 and his situation, but he seems to adjust rather well, aside from being bemused about answering machines.

During his search, Mel stays at the home of single mother Claire, given a fair portrayal by Jamie Lee Curtis (and, as is essential to any Curtis movie, we see her with her blouse open). Her son Nat (Elijah Wood) is Mel's cute companion, but regrettably he's not cute enough, as when he takes Mel's advice to "sing his heart out" to the little girl down the lane, and he obeys, literally.

Director Steve Miner does do an admirable job of distinguishing 1939 and 1992 in terms of the colors and textures in which they are shot: 1939 is suffused with tan and green, with era-perfect props, while 1992 is all flash and bright color, with a greater emphasis on chase scenes.

The message of the movie — speak your heart now, you may not get another chance — is ultimately undone in the movie's conclusion, rather than underlined with dramatic force. Forever Young suffers from the delusion that you can take handsome Mel Gibson, throw in some '40s imagery and sentimentalism, a recurring love song by Billie Holiday, and a cute kid and you've got a romantic winner. Forever Young is a postcard from the past, with a Hallmark inscription written over it. ❑

"Lee , Washington Make Their Mark"

The epic movie X is an even-handed, engaging treatment of the civil rights leader that is easily the finest of Spike Lee's six movies. In addition to fine performances from Albert Hall, who plays Brother Baines - Malcolm's initiator into Islam - and Delroy Lindo, who plays Malcolm's crime boss father figure Archie, Denzel Washington steals the show as Malcolm X. To compare the articulate, iron-gazed Malcolm at X's conclusion with the hustling, slick-tongued Negro caricature at the beginning, is to realize the enormous talent of Washington. A voice at the end of the film asks, "Did you ever hear Brother Malcolm?" and "Did you ever see him smile?" Spike Lee gives you the opportunity to do so here, and "to do so" is encouraged. T.S.L.

A Few Good Men

"Exciting, Moving, and Funny"

Rob Reiner hits on a fail-safe formula for his latest picture: big stars in a politically-relevant drama, climaxing in riveting courtroom exchanges in A Few Good Men, a film in which two Marines are on trial for murdering one of their own. Lawyers Tom Cruise and Demi Moore try to prove the death was accidental as a result of secret disciplinary orders from above. Tom Cruise reprises his usual hot shot character role with élan, while Demi Moore hands in a respectable and dignified performance as an internal affairs officer. Jack Nicholson, while convincing as a hard-nosed colonel, tends to lapse into Nicholson-ese, playing the sly, smart-mouthed speechmaker. A Few Good Men contains decent comedy as well as moving action, and winning lines are equally distributed. T.S.L.

Aladdin

"Pure Magic From Disney"

Disney Pictures have outdone themselves yet again with a sure to be classic in large part thanks to Robin Williams, lending his manic comedic talent to the Genie. The Disney animators keep pace with him, giving his imaginative rantings visual action, and William's rapid fire humor is only heightened with these visual aids. Although Princess Jasmine is as liberated as Belle in Beauty and The Beast, she cannot escape being drawn with comely cleavage and a 10-inch waist. Aladdin is a lovable poor boy, but where did this Arabian kid learn to give his monkey "five?" If you haven't seen an animated movie since childhood, go to see Aladdin to recapture a feeling Disney introduced to many of us as kids: joy. T.S.L.

The Efficiency Expert

"No Laughs Wasted on This Company"

Anthony Hopkins plays Wallace, a stone-faced consultant who specializes in down-sizing companies, making them efficient and as synchronized as clocks. After walking in on the smiling, ancient employees of a moccasin factory and their dingy, inefficient accommodations, Wallace realizes that factory employees are flesh and blood, and should be treated as such. This comic import from Australia is full of endearing characters, evoking the light-hearted eccentricities of the Ealing comedies of the '40s and '50s like Whiskey Galore and The Lavender Hill Mob. An instructive parable, it provides a lesson in humanity for the corporate leaders of today. J.S.

Flirting

"An Adolescent Love Story Suitable for Adults"

Despite its terrible title, this Australian film, about the love affair of a white boy and a black girl, is uncommonly intelligent and compassionate, managing to avoid the condescension or overwrought Romeo-and-Juliet preciousness of most teen love pictures. The slight, stuttering boy (Noah Taylor) and beautiful Ugandan girl (Thandie Newton) develop their relationship amid the crushing regimentation of boarding school, maintain their self-respect and dignity in the face of ignorance, racism and petty cruelty. But the film is not a downer - it's charmingly funny, and the various bullies and jerks who torment Bird are, in their own way, complex and sympathetic characters. They're smart enough to recognize the redemptive power of love, and are themselves redeemed. A.L.

Big White Lies

Some Absolute Truths About Skiing—Not!

EDITED BY LISA GOSSELIN

Don't eat before you swim. Walk under a ladder and you're in for bad luck. Break a mirror and you'll face seven years of it. Butter a burn to keep it from blistering.

Remember all those "truisms" Mom taught you? Remember what a funk you went into when you realized they were nothing but myths?

Few sports have as many myths as skiing. We polled skiers from Tennessee to British Columbia to find the great ones, the powder-white lies ski instructors, skip shop mechanics and, yes, even moms, have told for years. And in the pages that follow, we hereby debunk them. (Moms, take note.)

1. MYTH: Moguls are made by ski resorts piling dirt mounds beneath the snow.
REALITY: Most of us know that moguls are made by skiers following the same line, and turning in the same spot, down a run. Others want to know where moguls are grown and what mogul machines look like.

2. MYTH: Buy ski boots lager than street shoes for comfort.
REALITY: This myth may have started in the dark ages of unlined leather boots when you needed to wear several pairs of socks to get the right fit. Buy a large boot today and you'll be plenty comfortable in the lodge but will suffer blisters from your feet sloshing around on the mountain. You'll also have a hard time controlling your skies.

3. MYTH: Wax makes skies go too fast.
REALITY: Wax will make a ski glide faster, but its primary purpose is to help skis glide smoothly through turns. Unwaxed skis, on the other hand, alternately grab and let go.

4. MYTH: Skiing is dangerous.
REALITY: According to the United Ski Industries Association, only 2.95 in every thousand skiers have accidents (don't ask what happened to the other 5/100 of a skier). This stat ranks skiing somewhere between tennis and volleyball in terms of risk. And consider this: Stats from the National Safety Council show that you are three times more likely to suffer an accident bicycling than you are skiing.

5. MYTH: Mount Snow is named for the prodigious amount of snow that it receives.
REALITY: Walter Schoenknecht, Mount Snow founder, named his mountain after Reuben Snow, the farmer who previously owed the land around the base of the Vermont mountain. The peak's true name is Mt. Pisgah. Schoenknecht didn't think that was a great name for a ski area.

6. MYTH: Sit back in powder.
REALITY: This myth has been perpetuated by powder hounds who would rather see the rest of us fall on our butts in two feet of fresh snow than crowd their untracked powder runs. Sitting back is simply a recovery strategy. It relinquishes turning control and causes you skis to go straight. Good powder skiers pressure neither their tips nor tails but ski from a neutral, centered stance.

7. MYTH: Lift tickets are overpriced.
REALITY: In 1991 the average price of a weekend lift ticket was $28.93. That's less than what it costs for a one-way adult ticket at Disney World ($33), a night at the symphony (Los Angeles Philharmonic, $42) or a decent seat at a Chicago Bears game ($30). What's more, the average lit ticket price has only risen by $8 in the past five years while the number of vertical feet a skier can chew up using high-speed lifts nearly doubled.

8. MYTH: Wear a second pair of socks when it's cold.
REALITY: Who started this one—he sock manufacturers? "Two pairs of socks can actually make your feet feel colder," says SKI boot testing director Jeff Rich. "Extra socks can pinch off blood circulation—or cause them to perspire—which makes them feel cold." To combat cold feet: spray you feet with antiperspirant before putting on you boots; change damp socks at lunch; sprinkle cayenne pepper in the toe area of your socks to keep the blood flowing to the capillaries; invest in boot heaters or boot muffs; or wear a hat—it helps maintain your body temperature.

9. MYTH: You can't make snow if the temperature isn't 32 degrees or less.
REALITY: Snowmaking depends on the "wet bulb temperature" (a combination of humidity and temperature). In the West, areas can make snow in the high 30's; in the East it can be 29 degrees but still too damp to make snow.

10. MYTH: Real experts ski with their legs together.
REALITY: The Mahre twins blew this one apart in the early-Eighties. You may want to look like you are going down the mountain on a pogo stick, but skiing with your feet slightly apart gives you independent leg action and better balance for easier turning.

11. MYTH: If you don't learn to ski when you're young, you'll never learn.
REALITY: Tell that to 102-year old Luther Reynolds who learned to ski at age 72. Over the past 30 years his improvement has been dramatic—and he always buys a season pass to New York's Holiday Mountain.

12. MYTH: A mountaintop lodge is a good place to rendezvous with friends.
REALITY: As in "Meet me at Mid-Vail at noon"? Odds are 90-1 that at noon you will be in a liftline at the base with 1,355 other skiers. You will reach the lodge at 1 p.m. and realize you were supposed to be at the other mountaintop lodge.

13. MYTH: Stretch pants will improve your social life.
REALITY: Clinical studies tracing the effect of Lycra and spandex on the breeding patterns of the skiing population have yet to uncover any firm evidence supporting this theory.

14. MYTH: You can easily break a leg skiing.
REALITY: Fewer than 10 percent of all ski injuries are broken legs. According to a study by Jasper Shealy of the Rochester Institute of Technology, nearly one third of all ski accidents result in knee injuries. Of course it sounds better to say you broke your leg on a gnarly bump run than admit you slipped getting out of the Jacuzzi.

15. MYTH: Machine-made snow is always icy.
REALITY: Fluffy, flat, granular or gritty, machine-made snow can be made to any texture. Most resorts make the snow wet and heavy to better cover the slopes. Machine-made snow generally stands up to skier traffic better and becomes less icy than natural snow.

16. MYTH: Howard Head developed the first metal ski.
REALITY: Dr.T.H. McConica invented the Dow Metal Air Ski and Chance-Vought Aircraft Company in Connecticut produced the solid aluminum Truflex before Howard Head's aluminum "cheaters" (considered the first commercially successful metal ski) appeared on Vermont's Mt. Mansfield in 1948.

17. MYTH: Downhill skiing isn't beneficial exercise.
REALITY: Not according to Dr. Kenneth Cooper, who in his best-selling book Aerobics, claims that 30 minutes of continuous downhill skiing on a slope that challenges your ability is the aerobic equivalent of playing two sets of tennis, playing 18 holes of golf, 43 minutes swimming one mile, cycling 13 miles, walking six miles or jogging one mile in 10 minutes. Says Dr. Gene Hagerman of the Sports Rehabilitation and Performance Center in Vail, Colorado, "Skiing taxes your cardiovascular system. skier on an intermediate or advanced slope will burn 8-12 calories a minute. The harder you ski, the more calories you can burn."

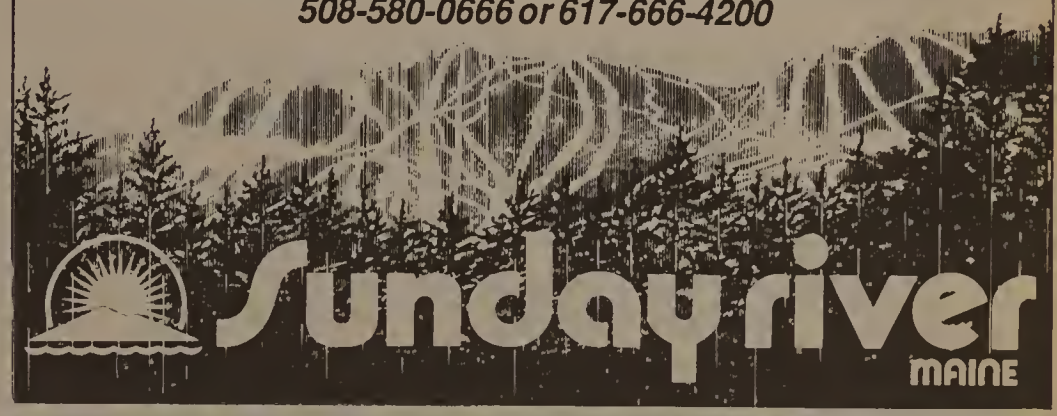
18. MYTH: If you're cold, pop in for a brandy.
REALITY: This is a myth we hate to debunk. Although alcohol dilates blood vessels in the extremities causing one to feel warm, its long-term effect is to dissipate body heat more quickly and reduce endurance to cold. Unfortunately, this puts more keg-carrying St. Bernards out of business.

19. MYTH: The higher you go, the colder it gets.
REALITY: Cold air sinks. Ski resorts often experience temperature inversions, meaning the top of the mountain can be 10-20 degrees warmer than the base.

20. MYTH: Alberto Tomba is the World Cup and World Champion.
REALITY: Not! Playboy, wild driver, bon vivant, three-time Olympic gold medal winner, Tomba is many thing. But as far as the annual overall World Cup and biannual World Championships go, he's been a real "la bomba," never having taken top spot in either contest.

21. MYTH: Base depth reports are the most important indicator of snow cover.
REALITY: Reported base depths are often measured randomly and may not accurately reflect an area's snow cover. Information on the number of runs open and surface snow type and condition give a much better indication of an area's snow conditions.

22. MYTH: Machine-made snow isn't real snow.
REALITY: If machine-made snow came in a package, it would be on the supermarket shelf next to the whole grains, tofu and organic tomatoes. It may look like the stuff that's shot from fire extinguishers but machine-made snow uses the same ingredients Mother Nature does: water and cold air. Snowmakers just help her out when she is busy with other things.



23. MYTH: The better the skier, the longer the ski.
REALITY: All other things being equal, a longer ski will generally ski faster - if you like your tracks fast. On the other hand, you'll never find a top mogul skier on a pair of 215's. Ski length depends mostly on how you ski and where you ski. ❑

ARTS

LEONARDO DA VINCI

The Anatomy of Man at The Museum of Fine Arts

BY CARRIE SHEPHERD

Most artists study anatomy so that they may render the human body more precisely, and in the fifteenth century, painters and sculptors commonly observed dissections of executed criminals. But Leonardo da Vinci, that infinitely Renaissance man, explored this subject well beyond surface observations. He performed his own dissections, eventually challenging the day's supernatural explanations for the body's workings. His notes on his discoveries are a unique culmination of beautifully rendered delicate drawings of scientific inquiries, and are on display for the first time in New England at the Museum of Fine Arts — a location chosen because of its proximity to the Longwood Medical Area and Boston's profusion of hospitals.

"The Skull: Interior View," 1489, Leonardo Da Vinci, Italy, 1452-1519

The non-medically inclined should not avoid this exhibit though; the drawings are beautiful works on their own, and the history of their creation is fascinating. Organized chronologically the drawings are accompanied by the artist's notes in "mirror writing" blocks of text squished in around the pages that seem to be balanced pieces of the works. (Being left handed, Leonardo wrote notes for his perdonal use from right to left so that he wouldn't have to pay attention to potential smudging accidents.

From his earliest etchings (such as a skull drawn in a way which revealed its inner layer), Leonardo pioneered visual explanatory techniques still used today. The "explosion," which he uses to show the separate vertebrae of the spine, is another example of his creative insight. He also was the first to portray the spine with its true curvature.

Additionally, he applied the architectural technique of showing different perspectives to his drawings of body parts. Leonardo was able to dissect animals more frequently than humans of course, and applied what he learned to human structure. A pen and ink drawing over red chalk — showing the muscles and bones of the leg and hip — exhibits the human leg alongside that of a horse.

Leonardo's investigations eventually led to the deeper workings of the body, and his presence at the death of a very old (and extremely lean) man in 1507-1508 led to the first records of cirrhosis of the liver, arteriosclerosis, calcification of vessels, and coronary vascular occlusion. When he collaborated with Marcantonio's della Torre, a young professor of anatomy at the University of Pavio, he was able to break with the method of interpreting what he saw in his era's misunderstood physiology that had previously resulted in inaccurate anatomical investigations. Enlightened to the philosophy that every part has a function, Leonardo learned to base his deductions on material investigations, resulting in what are frequently called the finest anatomical drawings ever created. Following Marcantonio's death in 1511, Leonardo turned his studies to embryology and the heart. He correctly deduced the functioning of the heart's valves and some of his conclusions in this area are still being verified by modern research. It had been Leonardo's intention to publish a treatise on anatomy, and his meticulous notebooks filled with notations and drawings could have edified his contemporaries to an unprecedented degree. However, in 1515 an enemy accused him of unspecified sacrilegious practices, and the pope then barred Leonardo from anatomical investigations. Hence, Leonardo's achievements in anatomy did not achieve the fame of his Mona Lisa: he had virtually no impact on the history of European anatomical knowledge. Though most were lost, about 200 sheets of his anatomical notebooks survive in private collections — those in the MFA's exhibit from the Royal Library at Windsor Castle. They are in Boston through February 21. ❑

STAGE NOTES

Lyle Kessler's Orphans will be presented in Cambridge by the Nora Theatre Company January 7 - 30. The three-character absurdist black comedy, directed by Eric Engel, co-stars Theodore Kazanoff, Joe Pacheco, and Steven Longmuir. The theatre is located at the corner of Quincy and Harvard Streets in Harvard Square. For information, call (617) 495-4530.

The Huntington Theatre Company is presenting the first major American production of My Mother Said I Never Should January 8 - February 7. Written by Charlotte Keatley, this is a compassionate, often humorous account of four generations of mothers and daughters within one British family during the century. The play won numerous awards in Britain. For information and tickets, call (617) 266-0800.

Brian Friel's award-winning Dancing at Lughnasa will be at the Colonial Theatre January 6 - January 17. The play premiered at Dublin's Abbey Theatre in 1990, and came to New York in October 1991, where it garnered three Tony Awards, including Best Play and Best Director. The Broadway cast, which replaced the Abbey Theatre actors, will appear in Boston. Donal Donnelly is the headliner. Patrick Mason repeats his directorial chores. To charge tickets, call (617) 931-2787. For other information, call (617) 426-9366.

Andrew Lloyd Webber's Aspects of Love follows at the Colonial Theatre, in a one-week run January 19 - 24. Barrie Ingham stars. Robin Phillips directs. Charge and info numbers are the same.

The Boston-area premiere of Beau Jest, a comedy by James Shenman, has been extended through January 10 at the Leventhal-Sidman Jewish Community Center in Newton. Daniel Gidron has directed the Equity production. For information and tickets, call (617) 965-5226.

Four classic musicals are on their way to Boston in a Colonial Theatre/Wang Center Subscription Series. The award-winning revival of Guys and Dolls plays the Colonial in May. Camelot comes to the Wang Center in April. Robert Goulet, who originated the role of Lancelot, stars now as King Arthur. Annie Get Your Gun will play the Colonial later this spring. Cathy Rigby, who was last here in Peter Pan, is the sharpshooting Annie Oakley. My Fair Lady also will be onstage at the Colonial Theatre in May. Richard Chamberlain is Professor Henry Higgins in this Broadway-bound production. Subscribers will have ticket-exchange and discount-parking privileges. For information, call (617) 426-9366.

Energetic Acting With Little Insight

BY NANCY LEONARD

At the American Repertory Theatre, Black Snow fails to come to ingratiating dramatic life — despite its whimsical staging. This adaptation by British playwright Keith Dewhurst of an unfinished novel by Mikhail Bulgakov reportedly was a huge success last season at the Royal National Theatre. In its American premiere, it's been revised and shorn of an intermission while under the direction of Richard Jones. Whatever changes were made, the piece has not improved. Words like "hilarious" and "sidesplitting," used in advance publicity, seem to describe another work entirely. The evening at the ART is tedious and only minimally insightful.

Derek Smith as the playwright Maksudov in "Black Snow"

Bulgakov, who was in and out of favor with Soviet authorities during the Stalinist era, worked for six years at the celebrated Moscow Art Theatre. But by the late 1920's, it was suffering from general ossification and divided leadership. Its founders, Constantine Stanislavsky (father of "method" acting) and Vladimir Nemirovich-Danchenko, had not spoken to each other in decades. Though the author's first theatrical venture (an adaptation of his war novel, The White Guard) was successful, he quit in bitter frustration in 1936 over the staging and cancellation of his last play, Moliere. In despair, Bulgakov started a novel about these experiences - a mocking satire of backstage life and, by extension, a plea for the artist in a censorious society.

It is this novel - still in draft at Bulgakov's death in 1940, and variously titled Diary of a Dead Man, The Theatre Novel, and (in English) Black Snow - which Dewhurst adapted for the stage. But the short scenes, showing the difficulties which a writer named Maksudov has with the bureaucracy at the Independent Theatre, often have more of a literary than a dramatic feel, and do not coalesce into a compelling or pungent work. You need to know the facts, sketched out above, in order to understand what's going on — and even then, details of particular scenes don't add much to the picture. Some things are funny, to be sure, but in a mild and irrelevant way. Most distressingly, the story of Maksudov's frustrations (he moves from scene to scene as observer, accomplishing very little) becomes as trying for the audience as for the artist.

Director Richard Jones, known hereabouts for his staging of La Bete two years ago at the Wilbur Theatre, has imparted a stylized European irreverence to the proceedings, in which the absurdities of real life mingle with the unreality of imaginary characters.

The playing space is a beige trapezoidal box, which manages both to focus and distance the action. Various locations are suggested with minimal decoration (a desk, pictures, some chairs, etc.). The backwall briefly breaks and pivots to depict a curtain call, then is finally pushed back to create empty rehearsal space. This final scene is the most completely dramatized, and the most observant, as it savages Stanislavsky's introspective acting method and his sycophantic disciples. Earlier, there's some punch in a scene with a rapid-fire typist, though perhaps for the wrong reasons. Maksudov's interview with the cloistered Stanislavsky has a few bright moments, but is largely a wasted opportunity.

The acting is sharp and energetic, with a good rendering of the absurdity. With chalky makeup, spectacles, and spiky hair, Derek Smith captures the desperation and desire of the struggling writer, but not exactly his stagestruckness. As Ivan Vasilyevich (Stanislavsky), Alvin Epstein is an imperious and eccentric director, demanding adherence to his own artistic interpretations. His domain mirrors the totalitarian state. Candy Buckley is wonderful as the rapid typist, striking the keys while juggling diverse responsibilities. Margaret Gibson is amusing as a method actress who cannot act. Royal E. Miller is very good as the actor who is Maksudov's mentor. Jack Willis' flamboyant literary manager, Misha Panin, would be more effective if we could tell whose side he is on. He receives praise from all factions. William Young strikes a breezy note as the unyielding business manager, and other actors play a variety of roles.

Antony McDonald's box-like set is framed with two small papier-mâché buildings. One, which swivels, represents the squat, old-style Independent Theatre. The other is Maksudov's high-rise, topped with a red star. Its windows light up as he climbs the stairs although the sound is more like hammering than a heavy footfall. Later, when he tosses scraps of his manuscript out a rear window, the pieces fall like snow from the lit building. Overhead is a line of photographs, depicting theatrical greats and lesser local functionaries in the same pose. Vasilyevich's photo opens at one point. McDonald's costumes are varied and apt. Scott Zielinski's lighting is fine.

Black Snow's whimsy counts for naught. It's a tedious evening of little insight. ❑

HOLIDAY PICK

Greased water balloons, anchor chains, jello, frosted chocolate cake, battle axes and peeled lamb's head. No it's not the shopping list for the Addams' family Christmas party, it's a sampling of things that the Flying Karamazov Brothers have juggled. You can catch them performing their unique brand of juggling now through January 3 at the Hasty Pudding Theater. Their vaudeville style show, Juggle and Hyde is a hilarious blend of juggling, song, dance and improv comedy. The Karamazov's juggling mastery encompasses not only the tossing of the traditional knife and club but also the deft manipulation of wit and pun.

The Karamazov's trademark act is "The Gamble," where brother Ivan must juggle objects brought by audience members or suffer a pie in the face. You can bring any object that weighs more than an ounce, but less than 10 pounds and is smaller than a breadbox. As Karamazov Ivan puts it "No live animals or anything that will prevent me from being a live animal."

They don't really fly, aren't Russian and are not related, but the Flying Karamazov Brothers are sure to bring a smile to the meanest of holiday Scrooges.

Shows are Tues - Sat. at 8 p.m. and Sundays at 7 p.m... Weekend matinees are also available. Call the Hasty Pudding Box office at 496-8400 for ticket information. D.B.L.

How to Make a Snow Ball

BY LESLIE SEMONIAN

During the holiday season, with all the festivities, it's hard not to think about the less fortunate among us. Maybe that's why holding a fundraising-focused holiday party is such an appropriate way to celebrate the season, offering partygoers a chance to help the needy while having a great time.

Finance Chairperson Mary O'Neil and SCA President Todd Kurland at the Black Diamond Club reception before the Snow Ball

Santa Claus Anonymous, a non-profit organization founded in 1987 by four couples on a group blind date, managed to do just that. Their annual benefit dance, the Snow Ball, was held Friday, December 11th at the Sheraton Boston. Over 3,000 young working professionals enjoyed the festivities, and helped to raise more than $100,000 for a variety of inner-city youth programs.

Dana Bisbee of the Boston Herald gets the Snow Ball scoop from co-founder Alexis Belash

The success of the Snow Ball is often attributed to social networking among friends. However, SCA president Todd Kurland feels that the social aspects of the event are mainly a side benefit. "Success comes from people becoming involved and taking ownership," he said. "There is a tremendous influx of ideas that people want to make happen. Each SCA ambassador acts as a host, so in a way, it's everybody's party. Everyone takes on responsibility and accountability for the event." That "positive energy" is so infectious with this group that a number of former participants started up the "Beach Ball" in San Francisco, raising $10,000 for community youth in their first year.

Jasmine Heghinian, Dave Hofferberth and Bill Cusack enter names in the database as checks come pouring in

Although SCA is active throughout the year, momentum starts building around September for their big event. Ambassador meetings, open to anyone interested, are organized and committee heads are appointed to the 25 committees that are formed. Kurland makes a point of mentioning that even the ambassadors, with their insider status, pay for their Snow Ball tickets.

Santas helpers, Bob Polutchko, Anne Marie Fallon and Ruth Smith busy making elf costumes for the Ball

The beneficiaries this year included Bridge Over Troubled Waters, Boston City Lights, Youth Enrichment Services, Youth Gardening Project, Tutoring Plus, Project Joy, Chelsea Tutoring Project, Compass, Peer Leaders Education Project, and the Stepping Stone Foundation.

As a SCA ambassador myself, I can attest that the experience is most rewarding. Fund raising gives a broader prospective of what is happening in the world. It provides new opportunities for the beneficiaries, while at the same time building friendships that will last a lifetime.

COMEDY

"Getting a Laugh Gave Me a Buzz"

An Interview With Chance Langton

BY JENNIFER MCCANN

Somewhere in between the frenetic style of Woody Allen and Steven Wright's absurdity lies the ambiguous approach of a comic who likes to take his "chances." A natural performer, comedian Chance Langton utilizes several different styles in his act, characterizing himself as a troubled outsider bent on the absurd. For example, Langton asks, "Do you remember the singer Gloria Gaynor who sang 'I Will Survive'? Whatever happened to her?"

Born and bred in Quincy, Langton recollects the performances of Johnny Carson on the program Who Do You Trust, and says comedy pioneers Red Skelton and Jackie Gleason put him "in tune with comedy" as a kid. These comedians and his mother's "great laugh" encouraged Langton to pursue a career in comedy. "Getting a laugh gave me a buzz," he recalls.

Langton began his stage career singing in rock bands and studying acting. It was this experience that prepared him for stand-up comedy and gave him a self-proclaimed "cocky" attitude about performing live.

Langton's first break in stand-up happened when he fled to L.A. following the end of a long relationship. "I was wallowing in my own self pity and I went to an open mic night at the Comedy Store where they hired me as a regular," recounts Langton. After this instant success in 1975-76, Langton returned to Massachusetts and began doing stand-up at Boston clubs during what he refers to as "the Renaissance of comedy.

"Between 1978-79, I performed at the Comedy Connection, the Stand-Up Comedy Cafe and the Ding Ho in Cambridge where historic performances were taking place by great comedians such as Barry Crimmins, Steven Wright, Don Gavin, Paula Poundstone and Mike Donovan," states Langton.

Then, in the early eighties, Langton hit the New York scene and began touring with one of his favorite comics - Rodney Dangerfield. With his experience in New York, Langton went on to produce an album called "Cause That's The Way I Am" and began a nationwide tour of stand-up clubs in New York, Boston, San Francisco, Houston and L.A.

While attending a comedy convention in Las Vegas, Langton became charmed by the television circuit. At one point, he was even up for the "Kramer" role in the hit show Seinfeld. Tempted by this new venue, Langton moved back to L.A. and starred in the movies House Party 2 and It's A Complex World. He has also appeared on Comic Strip Live, An Evening at the Improv, The Comedy Channel and Showtime.

All of these performances gained Langton opening act status in last May's Styx show at Great Woods, giving him his largest live audience to date. It was, he says, one of the most satisfying experiences of his career. "Because I have a stage background, I'm very comfortable performing live and I love to get the crowd going," he notes.

Langton describes the Boston scene as "an incredible place to perform where everyone has their own style." Yet he believes L.A. is like the "Olympics of comedy," to where the best of the best will always flock.

What's next for this funny man who likes to take chances? "I'm going back to L.A. in January for my fifth appearance on Comic Strip Live," he says, "and I'm working on some projects in L.A." In between appearances, Langton also conducts a comedy workshop out of his home where he teaches comics how to present themselves on stage, and offers tips on encountering live audiences, T.V. preparation, and the business-end of a career in comedy.

Langton is appearing at the Stand-Up Comedy Cafe in the Charles Playhouse on December 28. For more information about his comedy workshop, contact Chance at (617) 328-4471. ❑

DINING

DAVIOS, BROOKLINE VILLAGE

Snowed In And Happy

BY JONATHON ALSOP

'Twas the evening of this season's first big hit of winter weather — in fact, it was the first blast Boston's had in the last couple of years, to tell the truth — but right away we started acting like cabin-feverish Vermonters in February. We knew what was wrong. We resolved to get out of the house, stay close to home, or bust.

Brookline Village offers up a nice mix of restaurants. The Village Smokehouse is an honest and authentic standard in the neighborhood. Bertucci's? Again? Skipjack's is always a possibility, but I end up pining for the bar at Legal in Park Square. Bo Shing has some of the best scallion pancake ever. And then there's Davio's.

My feelings about Davio's have always been strangely mixed. For one thing, the location is the former Village Coach House, an authentic Irish bar from the days when Brookline Village was more like Whiskey Point and less like Coolidge Corner. They served Boston's best Black & Tan, and I miss it every time I walk by. For another thing, Brookline's "way" with Italian cuisine (with the fortunate exception of Enzo's on Harvard Street) has left a lot to be desired. As my friend Jay put it, "It tastes like what Palm Beach retirees think Italian food tastes like." Finally, and most unfair to Davio's, I knew the owner's cousin for about 20 minutes three summers ago, and her company was recently assessed a mega-dollar EPA fine for polluting New Hampshire, and I just can't seem to get it out of my mind. Call me sentimental, but these influences have made it hard for me to give Davio's a fair chance.

We broke out of the house about 8 that evening, managed to make port through the storm, and in no time, we were watching the horizontal snow from one of Davio's downstairs booths. A bar shared the ground floor, and there's an upstairs dining room. The decor was sparse and restrained. Davio's used short white burgundy glasses for water, and this amounted to practically the main significant design concept. Except for the golden torchieres lights on the walls, we were in an adornment-free zone.

The wine list was quite good and very well-priced. Most wines went for almost exactly twice retail, some a little less. We led off with a bottle of Ruffino 1990 "Libaio" ($20), an easy-to-drink modern blend of Chardonnay and Sauvignon Blanc. With our entrees, we had the Pra di Pradis 1990 "Malvasia" ($22), and it was out of this world. The Malvasia showed off lots of fresh fruit and excellent deep mineral flavors. It matched up well with the sauces and reminded me of a good French Chablis. Davio's wine list features a Furlan-Castelcosa 1990 "Tocai" ($18) that I wanted to try also. Clearly, we never got to the red end of the spectrum. That will be another visit.

Now — in spite of the nice things I just said about Davio's wine list — I must mention that it seems to start with someone's idea of a cruel wine joke: La Marca 1990 "Pinot Grigio" ($14), between 3 and 4 times its retail price, and what's worse, about 14 times its actual value as wine. I can't imagine why one of the worst values I've seen in a long time would happen (typo?), especially on a list that's otherwise so strong. It was the only rough stretch the whole evening.

For appetizers, we fashioned an off-the-wall surf 'n' turf from the lobster broth soup (familiar, like a clear cioppino) and the lamb sausage special with grilled potato pancake (for lack of a better word). The lamb sausage sauce was dark and spicy and had delicious smoked flavors. We took a break with some plain Caesar salads and a little more of the Libaio, and then tackled our main courses. Davio's tagliatelle was delicious with perfectly cooked pasta and a slightly sweet note in the sauce. Veal scaloppine con funghi came sauteed with Portobello mushrooms, an excellent match with the Malvasia. Finally, we tried one of the salmon entrees, and it was awfully good, but plain, especially compared with everything else we had that night. For dessert, we tucked into de-caf cappucino (geriatric, I know!) and pure ecstasy: chocolate and lemon budino, a polenta pudding that's so good it's hard to describe. Best of all, we had a plate with half a serving of each, and where the chocolate and lemon ran together was a marvel of a sensation. Davio's in Cambridge takes special orders at 661-4810 and sells the budino retail.

Davio's was a solid hit that night. The service was perfectly balanced: attentive and relaxed at the same time, a tough act to pull off in a town that seems to lead the nation in complaints per capita. We had no complaints. We were snowed in but happy. ❑

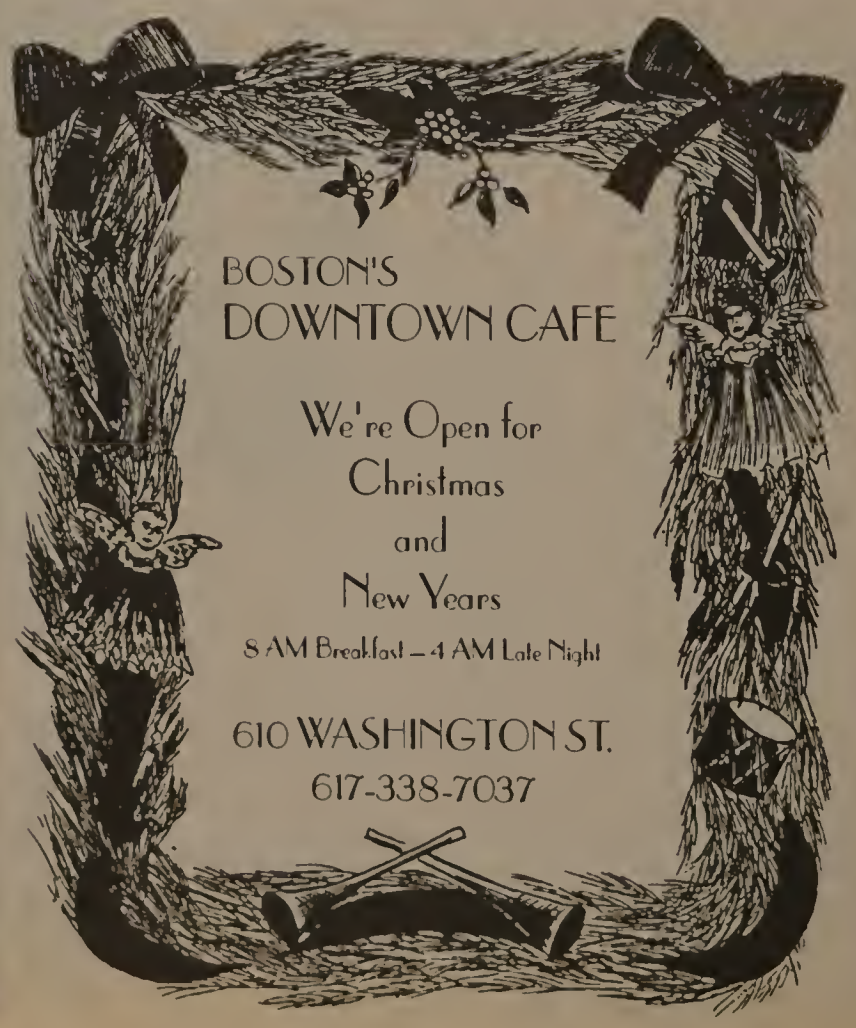
IN VINO VERITAS

"Do Not Read Until After January 1"

BY JONATHON ALSOP

Traditionally, January is a time for looking back and looking forward. For me, January is a time for looking in my wine rack and saying, "Hey! Where'd all my wine go!?"



Every year, it's the same thing. The holidays are a wine love-in, a free-for-all when every bottle on the rack is fair game 24 hours a day no matter how precious. Friends and loved ones show up with special bottles of wine left and right, and every one's a winner. December's just like that. Then comes New Year's and one last blow-out at the Champagne A-Go-Go propels the true wine lover into next year. But it's really next year, and about the 15th of January all these bills from the month of December (last year!) come rolling in. Next thing you know, it's back to the 2-for-$10 rack and the wine graveyard praying for something tasty to take you through the Death Months of January and February and only the first three weeks of March because I'm a real optimist. I find myself saying, "What's wrong with this wine?" when there's nothing wrong at all, it's just the difference between $15 and $5, between life and larger-than-life.

Something about being caught in this gray area between sense (spending less money) and sensation (going for it) causes me to reassess my whole wine perspective — once a year, whether I need to or not — through a blue funk. Will America ever find a way to fall back in love with wine? Is wine really a noble food, or is it nothing more than 25-proof booze and I'm just kidding myself? Why was I born? Surely not to be drinking that Romanian and Bulgarian trash from the 2-for-$7 bin while staring out the window at a frozen and snow-bound January landscape.

Call it "Seasonal Vinous Affective Disorder," and your therapist could bill your insurance $75 an hour helping you get over it. Of course, if you spent the $75 in one hour on wine, you could help yourself get over it, but your insurance won't even split it with you, as if that makes any sense. Suffice it to say, it's a dilemma.

Good luck, wine lovers. Here's my list of enjoyable cheap-o wines that might see us all through till spring. 1991 Mondavi Woodbridge Chardonnay, as low as $5 sometimes, available everywhere. 1990 Geyser Peak Semillion-Chardonnay blend, $7 and subject to case discounts, Blanchard's in Allston. Also at Blanchard's, Domaine de Capion Cab-Merlot blend, Merlot, and Syrah, all $7. 1990 Columbia Crest Chardonnay, $5, Beacon Beverage, Brookline. 1991 Gyongyos Chardonnay and Sauvignon Blanc, 1991 DuBoeuf Syrah Rose, 1990 Chateau de Baun Chateau Rouge, 1990 La Crema Creme de Tete Blanc and NV Creme de Tete Rouge, $5-$6-$7, Brookline Liquor Mart, Allston. 1991 Pine Ridge Chenin Blanc, $6, available almost everywhere. ❑

MANIACS ON THE LOOSE

The 10,000 Maniacs Take a Break From the Craziness

BY DAVID DALEY

10,000 Maniacs really aren't. Maniacs, that is.

In the more than three years since the release of their last original record Blind Man's Zoo (Elektra), the five Maniacs have busied themselves with activities far from the loony and madcap antics their name implies. They've gotten married, bought houses, started to raise families.

"We just needed to get situated, to get our feet planted solidly in the ground," explained a sleepy Jerome Augustyniak in an early morning phone interview from Richmond, Virginia.

Not exactly the way you expect big rock stars - with hits like "What's the Matter Here?," "Like the Weather" and "Trouble Me" to their name - to behave during a long layoff. But the Maniacs aren't exactly a rock band. They're an anti-rock band, using all the structures and conveniences of the medium to their own purpose.

The Maniacs got a little off-track on 1989's Blind Man's Zoo, a stale rehash of common musical ground, after distinguishing themselves on three earlier albums and a rare EP. And just as the band members, led by singer Natalie Merchant, returned to their family roots over the past three years, their latest release, Our Time in Eden, finds the band returning to the same art school experimentation that resulted in their most creative recordings.

"We wanted to get a different feel," Augustyniak said. "Blind Man's Zoo never really worked the way we wanted it to. A lot of the musical ideas had just been kicking around for a while or left over from In My Tribe. It's very dark and murky too - I'm not saying we write happy music - but it's not as punchy as the albums which came before.

"This time we went into the writing process looking for a different sonic quality, something densely textured. These songs don't really have a well-defined verse-chorus-bridge structure; they're kind of swirly."

Our Time in Eden synthesizes the Maniacs' dual personas, the pop purveyors and the self-conscious anti-rockers. It essentially blends the arty, minimalist tunefulness of The Wishing Chair with the shiny, happy melodicism of In My Tribe. Who better to capture this sound in the studio but producer Paul Fox, the man behind the recent efforts of quirky popsters like The Sugarcubes, XTC and Robyn "Don't call me quirky" Hitchcock.

"Paul Fox came in and shared our objective," Augustyniak said. "He understood the sound we were going for and kept us on track when we started to lose it. If left to our own devices, we'll keep fooling with a song in the studio well after it's done, and sometimes our original intention will drift away.

"He was able to help us figure out the things that worked, and helped us come up with nifty instrumental patterns. I really like the denseness, and the different textures that he's able to bring out in a song."

Two of the songs that work best are the lush "Gold River Bridges," where Merchant's quasi-Indian soprano glides neatly over an understated, upward-bending melody and luscious keyboard hooks and the epic "Jezebel," where shifting musical tempos, well-timed twists and turns and classical instrumentation are woven with wondrous melody and poetry.

Another noticeable difference on Our Time in Eden is the lack of overt political content. Augustyniak said that this new emphasis on writing songs about the personal realm and rediscovering of simple joys was another unconscious objective for the record.

"We're not trying to hit people over the head with a certain philosophy. The messages are a bit more personal and less along the path to political correctness," he laughed.

"We did change the scope of the songs a little bit, but I also woundn't say that it's a calculated thing. We worked on these songs for a year and a half, that they do reflect the things that were going on around us at the time: the Gulf War, the changing of the seasons, being trapped in 45 inches of snow, the first bloom of spring. We tried to capture these feelings and images."

The Maniacs plan a second swing though the United States later in 1993, the follow-up leg to a more successful short tour in November which found the band more relaxed and comfortable on stage in years. They were even known to stomp through covers of REM's "(Don't Go Back to) Rockville" and Morrissey's "Everyday Is Like Sunday." So what other bands have they been listening to in the tour bus lately?

"Jimmy Dale Gilmore, a lot of old Roxy Music." Augustyniak laughed. "And Helmet. I really like Helmet."

Maybe they're maniacs after all. ❑

A Phishy New Year's Eve

Phish Prepares To Party All Night

BY DAVID FENIGSOHN

Phish's fans are used to seeing the band in progressively larger venues. Several years ago, the band's dedicated, often tie-dyed fans could catch Phish at the Paradise. But with the release of their second album, Lawnboy, their popularity started to spawn and the foursome from Burlington, Vermont began to play larger venues, such as The Somerville Theatre and The World Trade Center.

This year, their latest release, A Picture of Nectar (Elektra), began receiving airplay rotation and their accessibility began to make it to the main stream. As a testament of their growing popularity, the band sold out the Orpheum this past spring and later returned to Boston to co-headline WBCN's Rock of Boston concert at the Boston Garden.

And now Phish are headlining yet another Boston venue on New Year's Eve at Northeastern University. Legendary among fans, Phish's epic New Year's shows have been a mainstay every December 31st. Last year's show at the Worcester Auditorium was a five hour, three set affair with much of the audience in "creative formal dress."

Anticipation for this year's celebration was at an all time high for the band; the venue sold out in under two hours. Dozens of hardcore fans lined up outside the Orpheum box office hours in advance to buy tickets.

The band's free-form concerts that have become a Phish staple often run for three hours. The band has over one hundred songs in it's live rotation and they use their set lists as suggestions more than anything else. Due to the improvisational nature of the shows, no song sounds the same way twice. So fans, who have been known to tour with the band, record every show. While some artists, like Dylan and U2, have gone to great measures to prevent bootlegging, Phish encourage it.

"Bootlegging has always been a really good way of getting the music out to different people," he said. "I think when we're having an on night, people are going to listening to this [concert] later and trading it around. That's a really exciting feeling."

Phish are also toying with the idea of releasing a bootleg of their own. "The idea behind doing a live album is that we have all these songs that have never been on an album that are popular live songs like 'Mike's Song,' 'Runaway Jim' and 'The Curtain.' We thought it would be really funny to release a live album with these songs on it and calling it The Best of Phish," laughed Anastasio.

Guitarist and cult figure Trey Anastasio says the band's steady climb has not been by design. "I would definitely say this is not the type of thing where we were thinking, 'O.K., let's get into the bigger halls.' It's not like we planned it."

Surely Phish don't take a commercial or conventional approach to their music. They play a improvisational fusion between a variety of genres of music, including jazz, country and guitar rock and even incorporate some thrash, a cappella and the occasional vacuum cleaner solo.

Phish's lyrics are another unique aspect of the band. While most bands sing about their babies or being real bad boys, their lyrics often tread bizarre paths such as "Control for smilers can't be bought/ The Solar Garlic starts to rot/ Was it for this my life I sought?/ Maybe so, maybe not."

"My friend Tom has been writing most of the lyrics," explained Anastasio. "On the last album, many of the lyrics were fantasy oriented, which is one direction of his that I really like. But on some of the newer material, more by accident than anything else, the lyrics are actually about something."

"Chalkdust Torture" (from Picture of Nectar), has been receiving limited play on a number of stations across the country, including WBCN and now Phish are close to having a hit single. Based around a great guitar riff, it is one of Phish's more easily accessible songs, at least as accessible as song called "Chalkdust Torture" can be. But the band is taking this in stride.

"I always assume that the stuff you here from a band on the radio is actually their worst stuff," added drummer Fishman. "So if that's any good, I figure the band is great." ❑

Our Classical Picks From 1992

BY STEVEN D. BROWN

Daniel Lentz: Missa Umbrarum; O-Ke-Wa; Postludium; Lascaux
New Albion

Music for wine glasses and voices? Making music with wine glasses may sound like avant-garde gimmickry, but such is far from the case. Had this been a film score, it would have received more attention. Listen and see your own film or just get lost in its ethereal atmosphere.

Szymanowski: String Quartets Nos. 1 & 2
Webern: Langsamer Satz
Carmina Quartet
Denon

Szymanowski's music is rarely heard. This young Swiss quartet makes a compelling case for his music in its stunning debut on CD.

Brahms: The Serenades, Symphonies and Overtures; Haydn Variations
BRT Philharmonic
Alexander Rahbari, Conductor
Naxos

Performances that range from good to excellent. Especially good renditions of the Serenades and the first two symphonies. The "budget " price makes this series all the more enticing.

Barber: Knoxville - Summer of 1915; Two Essays, etc.
Sylvia McNair, Soprano
Atlanta Symphony
Yoel Levi, Conductor
Telarc

Nobody has connected with the music and test of Knoxville better than Sylvia McNair. Levi and Atlanta are exemplary, as they are on their latest release of music by Mendelssohn. Get both!

Arnold: Serenade; Sinfoniettas Nos. 1 & 2; Concerto for 2 Violins
Igor and Vesna Gruppman, Violins
San Diego Chamber Orchestra
Donald Barra, Conductor
Koch International

Malcolm Arnold's well-crafted and tuneful music appeals to those who play it as well as to those who listen. Barra and company have just the right finesse to make you want to hear these works again and again.

Martin: Petite Symphonie Concertante; Six Monologues; Concerto for 7 Winds
Gilles Cachemaille, Baritone
Orchestre de la Suisse Romande
Armin Jordan, Conductor
Erato

If you don't know Frank Martin's music, this release is an ideal introduction. Martin was one of the true masters among this century's composers. More of his music by Jordan et al. would be welcome indeed.

Beethoven: The Late Quartets
Tokyo String Quartet
RCA

To many, these quartets are the embodiment of sublimity. Tokyo performs with breadth and depth, while maintaining a consistently radiant burnish on the surface.

Homage to Johannes Ciconia Ensemble PAN
New Albion

Ensemble PAN's third release on New Albion continues their survey of music of the late middle ages. Ensemble PAN brings this music to life with unparalleled elegance.

Music by Michael Nyman, Gavin Bryars and Mike Westbrook
John Harle, Saxophone
Bournemouth Sinfonietta
Ivor Bolton, Conductor
Argo

Music that isn't easily categorized. Most notable is Gavin Bryar's rhapsodic The Green Ray which recalls the lyricism of the Miles Davis/Joe Zawinul sound of In A Silent Way.

Bloch: Sacred Service
Foss: The Song of Songs
Ben-Haim: Sweet Psalmist of Israel
New York Philharmonic
Leonard Bernstein, Conductor
Sony Classical

The Bernstein of the early sixties was fresh and vibrant, especially, as is the case here, with music he readily identified with. The remastering is outstanding and the performances electrifying.

Improper Top 10 Picks of 1992

by Rey Roldan
Music Editor

1. Mercury Rev
"Yerself Is Steam", Columbia
Some may listen to this album and think it's just white fuzz, and for the most part it is, but orchestrated into neatly arranged chord progressions where music is noise and noise is music. Mercury Rev urges us to climb back into the womb, forget the silence and enjoy the noise. In other words, die Depeche Mode.

2. The Bats
"Fear of God", Mammoth
Fairly reminiscent of those other flying creatures, The Byrds, New Zealand's Bats revel in the darkness they inhabit and put out one of the best pop albums since Crowded House's eponymous debut.

3. R.E.M.
"Automatic For the People", Warner Brothers
R.E.M.'s quietest and lushest album to date. No "Orange Crush" or "Shiny Happy People" to cash into Michael Bolton territory. "The Sidewinder Sleeps Tonight" wins hands down with non-Top 40 single of the year.

4. Various Artists
"Tannis Root presents Freedom of Choice", Caroline
I never bought into cover versions but occasionally remakes turn out better than the original. This is that exception. Eighteen remakes by eighteen bands like Yo La Tengo doing Blondie's "Dreaming," Big Dipper reworking Pete Shelley's "Homosapien" and White Flag totally deconstructing Kate Bush's "Wuthering Heights" and turning it into a pumped-up rocker.

5. Carter USM
"1992: The Love Album", Chrysalis
Fruitbat and Jim Bob have emerged from London's sewers and discovered that the world isn't such a bad place after all. Not as punchy as 101 Damnations or as clever as 30something, 1992 still has the razor sharp bite of a cockney piranha.

6. Nine Inch Nails
"Broken E.P.", Interscope
If Trent Reznor could put out such a powerful EP from his anger at TVT Records, imagine what it would have sounded like if he was pissed off at the world.

7. Magnapop
"Magnapop", Caroline
Pure sugar-coated fuzz pop for those who like dropping lollipops on thick wool sweaters.

8. The Beautiful South
"0898", Elektra
The Housemartins should never have broken up. But The Beautiful South are only slightly less important but a hell of a lot nastier.

9. Annie Lennox
"Diva", Arista
This naked album of angst, heartbreak and independence showed the vulnerable but powerfully creative woman who hid behind the Eurythmics' inhuman technology. So whatever happened to the other half of the Eurythmics, Dave what's-his-name?

10. Arrested Development
"3 Years, 5 Months and 2 Days in the Life of...", Chrysalis
The single most important new rap outfit of the year. Tender southern fried funk without the bones cooked up with the Arrested Development family recipe.

by Sander Wolf

It's been an eclectic, turbulent and active year for local and national music. Dante's Grin (Boston) and David Garza (Austin, TX) have both already released follow-up albums to their top 10 entries, Billy Goat (Dallas, TX, gone national) has broken up and reformed, and Laurie Geltman (Boston), despite her talent and persistence, still isn't famous. These are the ten CD's that I played the most this year (buy 'em, and listen to the lyrics!):

1. Joe Henry "Short Man's Room"
2. The Cure "Wish"
3. Michael Penn "Free For All"
4. Jeffrey Gaines "Jeffrey Gaines"
5. 10,000 Maniacs "Our Time In Eden"
6. David Garza "Eyes Wide Open"
7. Laurie Geltman "Departure"
8. Billy Goat "Bush Roaming Mammals"
9. Juliana Hatfield "Hey Babe"
10. Dante's Grin "While The Saints Are Sleeping"

by Ben N. Venzke

House of Pain
"House of Pain", Tommy Boy

Curve
"Doppleganger", Charisma

Intermix
"Intermix", Third Mind

U2
"Achtung Baby", Island

Spent Poets
"Spent Poets", Geffen Records

Rise Robots Rise
"Rise Robots Rise", TVT Records

Jeffrey Gaines
"Jeffrey Gaines", Chrysalis

R.E.M.
"Automatic for the People", Warner Brothers

Nine Inch Nails
"Broken E.P.", Interscope

Skinny Puppy
"Last Rights", Nettwork/ Capitol

by David Daley

1. Wedding Present
"Hit Parade", First Warning
Some things never change. The Wedding Present reinvent themselves each year, and this incarnation is their most accessible yet - six singles and their B-side cover versions of The Monkees, Go Betweens and Julee Cruise. They're trying to keep the pop single alive; it's got a good beat and you can dance to it.

2. Mega City 4
"Sebastopol Road", Big Life/ Caroline
Rip-roaring frenetic guitar-pop from the UK fourpiece on their US debut, and lead singer Wiz's most original, refreshing and insightful takes on angst and alienation before the Smiths were dead.

3. Magnapop
"Magnapop", Caroline
Magnapop reclaim grunge from the depths of the Puget Sound, attach it to melody and Linda Hopper's mellifluous magnificence, not so much marrying noise and pop as demonstrating the harmonic discontent possible when attractive opposites live angelically in sin.

4. Drop Nineteens
"Delaware", Caroline
Growing up in the 80's meant being constantly torn between our junior high new wave pop roots and the better taste that came with our first exposure to college radio and Psychocandy. The resulting years were a struggle between those pop indoctrinations and knowing better.

5. The Cure
"Wish", Elektra
When we were kids, we wanted to see if Weebles really wobbled without falling down. So we threw them as hard as we could against the cement wall. They always survived standing. That's a personal and didactic way of saying Wish is one of the year's best. Criticize them, make fun of them, throw 'em against your wall - they always seen to bounce back with a trailblazing record.

6. Miracle Legion
"Drenched", Morgan Creek
A rich masterpiece with remarkable depth from the Connecticut fourpiece that has been doing this in shameful anonymity for the past eight years. Mark Mulcahy looks at the world through honest, innocent eyes, sweet and wistful, without ever looking back. Ray Neal has quietly become the best guitarist anywhere on alternative radio.

7. Curve
"Doppelganger", Charisma
Curve are just a 'v' away from The Cure. Apocalyptic guitars that churn, burst and explode combined with the seductively aggressive purring of Toni Halliday.

8. Eugenius
"Oomalama", Atlantic
Eugene Kelly may end up a super hero despite his own intentions and Marvel Comics' lawsuit, with beautifully bored lyrics, hyperactive harmonics and a blissful grungy throb. Ah, Big Star, so much to answer for.

9. The Disposable Heroes of Hiphoprisy "Hypocrisy Is the Greatest Luxury", Island
The year's best political record, solid throughout with their analysis of the Persian Gulf war, the effects of television on discourse and a cover of "California Uber Alles" that will hopefully keep California Governor Pete Wilson from the White House.

10. Uncle Green
"Book of Bad Thoughts", Atlantic
A subversive, feverishly melodic high-octane pop gloss coats the dark side of human nature, captured by Matt Brown in a distinctive third person voice. He manages to elude the gatekeepers of his id, takes notes on his darkest secrets and insecurities and drives back out without them even getting his license plate.

by George Poulos

1. Boogie Down Productions
"Sex and Violence", Jive
KRS-ONE's comeback.

2. Exodus
"Force of Habit", Capitol
The ultimate thrash limit.

3. Kool G. Rap and D.J. Polo
"Live and Let Die", Cold Chillin'
Hardest of all 1992 hardcore.

4. Testament
"The Ritual", Megaforce/ Atlantic
Rich, slow and heavy as life.

5. Carcass
"Tools of the Trade", Earache/ Relativity
Rhythmic, crystal-clear grindcore.

6. Basehead
"Play with Toys", Imago
The only original music of 1992.

7. Obituary
"The End Complete", Roadrunner
Rhythm change morbidity.

8. Entombed
"Clandestine", Earache/ Relativity
The Addams family's house band.

9. Megadeth
"Countdown to Extinction", Capitol
High-tech snarl-thrash.

10. Public Enemy
"Greatest Misses", Def Jam/ Columbia Terminator X's show.

by Louis Cardace

1. Enya
"Shepherd Moons", Warner Brothers
She paints an aural landscape better than Georgia O'Keefe.

2. Ya Kid K
"One World Nation", SBK
Now that Manuella Kamosi's separated from Technotronic, she really struts her stuff. The remake of "Move This" takes top honors.

3. Jodeci
"Forever My Lady", MCA
Now that cool rhythm harmonies are making their waves back into the mainstream, this foursome are ready to make a huge splash.

4. Eric Clapton
"Unplugged", Warner Brothers
Eric Clapton would sound great even if he was thrown into an echoey well.

5. Madonna
"Erotica", Maverick
Big deal, so she posed nude with Vanilla Ice. Her music still keeps titillating even after the rhythm stops.

6. B-52's
"Good Stuff", Warner Brothers
Even without Cindy, the B's are still the world's best party band.

7. The Wolfgang Press
"Queer", 4AD
TWP's danciest and most fluent album yet. "A Girl Like You" is the ballad that everyone tries to make but no one except these guys or Alison Moyet could muster.

8. R.E.M.
"Automatic for the People", Warner Brothers
Excellence was always in R.E.M.'s daily vocabulary.

9. Beastie Boys
"Check Your Head", Capitol
If you gotta fight for something, might as well be to put this album on yur turntable.

10. Screaming Trees
"Sweet Oblivion", Epic
It's too bad that a synonym for nirvana is Seattle. Screaming Trees comes closest to achieving that level of ecstacy more successfully than bratty Kurt & Co.

The Last Call Lady

Thank God This Parrish Doesn't Have a Priest

BY LAUREN DARE

The Parrish Cafe, a trendy, little restaurant/bar on across from the Rattlesnake Bar and Grill on Boylston Street, had its housewarming party on Wednesday, December 9. I believe I speak for all who attended when I say that the house wasn't the only thing that was warmed up. The cafe, opened by the owners of the "Snake," has been open for almost a month, though this was the event where it officially lost its virginity — and with a bang. The bar area was full of guests mingling and schmoozing, and I have to say, if this is the kind of clientele attracted to the cafe, then I will definitely return on future occasions. I know (only too well) that everyone looks infinitely better when you've got a few glasses of wine under your garter belt, but it certainly seemed to me that the crowd, with a few notable exceptions, was young, hip and good-looking.

At the beginning of the soiree, the Cafe provided samples of their menu, which consisted primarily of sandwiches created by some of Boston's most famous chefs: Lydia Shire, Jasper and Chris Schlesinger, to name a few. I completely missed this part, however, I did not miss the open bar which was changed to a "pay-as-you-go" situation as the evening progressed (a minor inconvenience that slowed me down just slightly). I think I managed to kill a few more brain cells on Wednesday, but I must start being careful with the five I've got left. I guess you could call it an occupational hazard.

The Cafe does not have a full liquor license, and presently serves only wine and beer. They do, however, have a very extensive wine list, and eight beers on draught. Believe me, red wine works just as well as my customary Absolut and tonic. In fact, it worked so well that my memory of my trip to the ladies room is vague at best, so I can't tell you many particulars about that little jaunt, except that I do remember seeing some "trendier-than-thou" Newbury Street women brushing their hair in the mirror. I also remember that upon my exit from the loo, a total stranger approached me, stuck his face in my hair and said that not only did I look sexy, but I smelled sexy, too. This completely novel approach was something that I thought would justify some follow-up work.

After another glass of wine and hearing this complete stranger's confession that he had been watching me in my little black dress since I walked in the room, I knew it was something to pursue. After all, I haven't been indulging in too many late-night escapades lately, and I decided it was high time. I think we took a cab home — yes, I'm sure we took a cab home. After that, well, I'll leave it up to your imagination. But if you happen to run into me at the Parrish Cafe, maybe I'll tell you in person. ❑

•ALLSTON SPORTS DEPOT 783-2300, 353 Cambridge St., Allston. With 2 satellite dishes and over 20 TV sets, this may be the best place to catch a game outside of Fenway or the Garden. No cover and no dress code. Just a plethora of sports fans chatting- and arguing about, what else, sports - over beers, appetizers and killer burgers.

•ARBUCKLES 782-9508, 1249 Comm. Ave, Brighton. Situated between BU and BC, Arbuckles attracts an even mix of students from both schools and anyone else in search of good food and drink at a good price. 20 oz. drafts for $2!!! The dress is always casual but the atmosphere ranges from mellow and relaxing to noisy and boisterous

•AVALON 262 2424, 15 Lansdowne St., Bos. Boogie to Hip Hop, Funk, House, Progressive and Top 40 music at this colossal dance club. Music varies nightly. Take advantage of the enormous dance floor, placid lounge, and intimate booths. Avalon also boasts having the best light show in town. The crowd here is a good mix; anyone in the mood for dancing should feel comfortable. Cover charge varies. Dressy slacks, collared shirts, and dark dress shoes required. Great place to see live shows. Sun. night is gay night

•AVENUE C 423-3832, 5 Boylston Pl., Bos. A chichi dance club located in the Theatre District across from the Common. Inside you'll find a mix of young professionals who arrive to meet, mix, mate, or just dance up a storm. Cover charge increases after 10 pm, so arrive early. No jeans or collarless shirts. Progressive music Fri. & Sat. nights

•BILL'S BAR 421-9678, Lansdowne St., Boston. Located in the midst of Lansdowne St., Bill's can be a great alternative to the dance clubs. It caters to a crowd consisting anywhere from punk to preppie. Bill's reputedly has the best jukebox in the city, programed by Peter Wolf. It's loud, clean and showcases live music occasionally. Casual and very relaxed.

•BLACK GOOSE 617-720-4500, 21 Beacon St., Boston. A relaxed jazz club situated a stones throw from the Statehouse. Sit back and enjoy superb live jazz at its best. It's casual, unassuming and you don't have to wear an I love jazz attitude on your sleeve. No cover. Live piano music Monday through Friday from 5-7.

•BLACK ROSE 742-2286, 160 State St., Bos. Live, traditional Irish music 7 days and an atmosphere that thrives on patron participation characterize this Faneuil Hall bar whose name is a symbol of Irish Catholic repression by the British. The food is home spun and the beer, well. . Irish. The upbeat crowd is composed of students, professionals, locals etc. and they all get involved in the show. Beware, people will know your status by stealing a glance at your claddagh ring! Moderate cover weekends. Casual dress.

•BOSTON BEACH CLUB 227-9664, 300 Faneuil Hall Mktpl., Bos A strong seaside theme prevails. Surfboard tables, plastic sharks, tropical drinks and a guy next to you wearing a Hawaiian shirt adorned with a few dozen neon leis. Live entertainment entertain ment nightly from Rock to Reggae and Blues.. There is a small dance floor for those who like to bop.

•BULL & FINCH PUB (CHEERS) 227-8665, 84 Beacon St., Bos A recent study confirmed what many Bostonians have assumed for years, The Bull & Finch actually attracts more tourists than most of the sights on the Freedom trail! The TV show Cheers uses the doorway of the Bull & Finch for their opening shot, but nothing else. Still, it offers a comfortable and boisterous neighborhood atmosphere. Try it at least once. No cover. Casual dress

•CITYSIDE AT THE CIRCLE 1960 Beacon St., Brookline 566-1002. A great place to relax and meet friends while watching your favorite sporting event. Stop by and pay us a visit. Conveniently located at the last stop on the C line, across from the Circle Cinema.

•CLARKE'S 227-7800, 21 Merchant's Row, Bos. Located just outside of Faneuil Hall, this is a popular meeting place for Boston singles and college students. Clarke's has that old-fashioned saloon appeal that makes it easier to let your guard down. Expect a line on weekends. No cover. Casual dress. Full menu in the restaurant.

•COMMONWEALTH BREWING COMPANY 523-8383, 138 Portland St., Bos. "Let no man thirst for lack of real ale" is the motto at this microbrewery and restaurant featurng glass walls so thirsty patrons can longingly observe the brewing process. The decor consists of copper tables, pipes and beer tanks. Approximately 10 English ales are served on tap as well as "Boston Burton Ale" served frosty cold in the bottle. Close proximity to the Boston Garden translates to before and after game crowds. Live Reggae and Calypso every Friday and Saturday Nite 9:30 to 1:00. Brewery tours are free, but sorry, this isn't the Molson factory. No samples. $3 Cover. Have dinner here and no cover.

•COTTONWOOD CAFE 661-7440, 1815 Mass. Ave., Bos. Open daily for lunch and dinner, this casual yet upscale cafe makes you feel like you've landed in the heart of Arizona. The southwestern cuisine (try the grilled specials) is complemented by the adobe booths and multitude of cacti. Relax in the outdoor cafe during the hot summer months.

•CROSSROADS 262-7371, 495 Beacon Street, Boston. Hailed as one of the last neighborhood pubs in Back Bay, this casual hotspot is frequented by locals, students and young professionals. Among its many attractions are three dart boards, cable sports, a loud jukebox and Guiness on tap. Open 7 days a week 'til 2.

•DAISY BUCHANAN'S 247-8516, 242 Newbury St., Bos. This Newbury St. late night hot spot packs up consistently with singles on the make. A dark and noisy place, where at least one anonymous source has protested the lack of condom dispensers at the bar. More action as the night wears on, this is a great place to be for last call. No cover. Casual dress.

•FROGG LANE BAR & GRILL 720-0610, 245 Faneuil Hall Mktpl., Bos. At this large Faneuil Hall patio bar, the crowd is a mix of tourists and locals. Lofted above the crowd in Faneuil Hall, Frogg Lane offers a mixed menu of American and Mexican fare. No cover or dress code. Jukebox for indoor entertainment.

•GREEN BRIAR 789-4100, 304-306 Washington St., Brighton. This neighborhood Irish pub in the heart of Washington Square has the best combination of the Celtic feel far from the parking mess of Government Center. Entertainment ranges from Irish music to the occasional progressive band. The crowd is a healthy mix of neighborhood folk and recent college graduates. Modest cover on weekends. Casual dress.

•HARPER'S FERRY 254-9743, 158 Brighton Ave., Allston. Perhaps Boston's best known R & B bar, Harpers offers live music nightly. Most of the bands are top local blues acts, but on Sun. the amateurs take over with open-mike night. Smoky but lots of fun with darts and billiards and a large dance floor. Moderate cover varies depending on the act. Collared shirts are required.

•LENOX PUB & GRILLE 536-5300, 710 Boylston St., Bos. Enjoy casual dining and an extensive array of imported and domestic beers in an authentic British pub. Attracts an older, quieter crowd. No cover. Neat dress. Sun. brunch 11:30am-2:30pm.

•LILY'S 720-5580, 101 S. Market Faneuil Hall Mktpl., Bos. The tourists have found a good deal at this cafe/piano bar where one can sample quality cheap eats and listen to piano Fri.-Sat. nights. No cover or dress code.

•THE LITTLEST BAR 523-9766, 47 Province, Boston. Located near Downtown Crossing. A quick walk from the Orpheum Theatre. As its name implies, The Littlest Bar is quite little. In fact, the place only seats 17 people. Guinness and Rolling Rock are among the beers served on tap. Edibles also served. Hours are from 8:30am-12am Weekdays and Saturdays.

•LUCKY JOHNNY'S 731-6753, 1098 Comm. Ave., Boston. Classic Rock rhythms fill the air at this upbeat college bar frequented mostly by BU, BC and Pine Manor students. On weekends, it gets pretty crowded. So beat the lines and get there early. The barback grill is always open and the smaller underground lounge is a nice place to chat. Dress is a relaxed casual to somewhat dressy. Best of all, there's never a cover.

•MARKETPLACE CAFE 227-9660, 300 Faneuil Hall Mkt., Boston. In a comfortable, relaxed area in Faneuil Hall, sit back and listen to the great sounds of the Brian Walkley Band with special guest Bruce Bartlett every Thursday at 8:30pm. "Street Magic" acapella every Wednesday at at 8:30. Casual atmosphere and dress.

•NIGHTSTAGE 497-8200, 823 Main St., Camb. An intimate, well laid-out club with a seating capacity of just 250. National and well known local acts. Blues, Rock, Zydeco, Jazz, Folk and Country are propelled by a sound system that will blast you comfortably to the outer limits of space and back. One of Boston's best up-close-and-personal clubs. Casual dress. Call Ticketron 931-2000 for ticket info.

•PARADISE ROCK CLUB 254-2052, 967 Comm. Ave., Bos. One of Boston's best live clubs. Inside, you'll find one of the last of the small stages which still attracts national and international acts. Cover varies from moderate to heavy. Dress is casual. Dancing on non-band nights. For show tickets, call Ticketmaster at 931-2000. Minimum age varies by show.

•PERRY'S 367-1297, 199 State St., Boston. Upstairs young professionals follow their favorite teams on six TV screens. While downstairs, college students and young professionals dance the night away Wed.-Sat. Located in the Faneuil Hall area, the dress is casual and the popcorn is excellent! Lunch and dinner served 11:30am-11pm.

•RATHSKELLER 536-2750, 526 Comm. Ave., Kenmore Sq., Bos. Affectionately known as the Rat, this is a rock club with staying power. Past headliners have included the Police, 10,000 Maniacs and R.E.M. The Rat attracts a hardcore alternative crowd - lots of black clothes and biker jackets. No cover upstairs. Varies downstairs. No dress code.

• RED HAT 523-2175, 9 Bowdoin St., Bos. You'll feel just like you're in a London pub. Dark and casual atmosphere. Attracts young professionals and Beacon Hill residents. No cover. Casual dress. One of the few places you can still get pitchers of mixed drinks.

•RYLE'S JAZZ CLUB 876-9330, 212 Hampshire St., Camb. If you're a Jazz fan, don't miss Ryles. Downstairs you'll find an older crowd listening to traditional Jazz music. Upstairs is funkier with talented fusion musicians. Feel free to move between floors. Cover varies from moderate to heavy. Casual dress.

•SCULLERS LOUNGE 783-0811, 400 Soldiers Field Rd., Camb. Renowned Jazz singers entertain here nightly. The bar is well stocked, the chairs are comfortable and the walls are paneled, evoking a mellow mood. The nighttime view of the Charles adds an air of romance. Heavy cover. Casual dress but no jeans or sneakers.

•T'S PUB 254-0807, 973 Comm. Ave., Boston. Great food, lively atmosphere and there's always something going on inside. Younger bar-hoppers beware: Only Valid ID's accepted (they're really tough!). Lunches and dinners are delicious and reasonably priced. College and thirtysomething crowd. Never a cover but always a good time.

•THE BARMUDA TRIANGLE 437-1011, 200 Brookline Avenue, Boston. Located just outside of Kenmore Square, The Triangle features live music seven nights a week. Catch Boston's best Jazz early in the week, and kick up your heels to Latin, R&B, Reggae and Rock through the weekends. Full bar. Reasonable entertainment charge after 9:30. Weekly giveaways include free passes, round trip tickets to Bermuda, T-shirts, parties and more!

•WALLY'S 424-1408, 427 Mass. Ave., Bos Treat yourself to unadulterated Jazz nightly at Wally's. Neatly tucked away on Mass. Ave. not far from Northeastern U., Wally's is easy to miss. The only indication that you've arrived is a small white beer sign out front. The atmosphere is dark, smoky and crowded and above all authentic. Mon. is Blues night. No cover. Casual dress. Arrive early to get a seat.

•WARREN TAVERN 241-8142, 2 Pleasant St., Boston. A funky little bar whose clientiele Includes young professionals & athletes. Reputedly having some of the most beautiful women in Boston. The bar now attracts manly athletes. Stars don't mind hanging out at the tavern because no one bothers them. TV is always on for sports. No tank tops. Bring I.D. Please don't drink and drive.

•WESTERN FRONT 492-7772, 343 Western Ave., Camb. A multicultural Reggae and Jazz bar where it's difficult not to get caught up in the rasta spirit. It's dark and dingy inside, but the place sparks alive when the bands take the stage. Cover varies from moderate to heavy. On Sunday nights, visit the Arts Café and enjoy music, comedy, performance art and poetry for only $5. Casual dress.

BOOKS

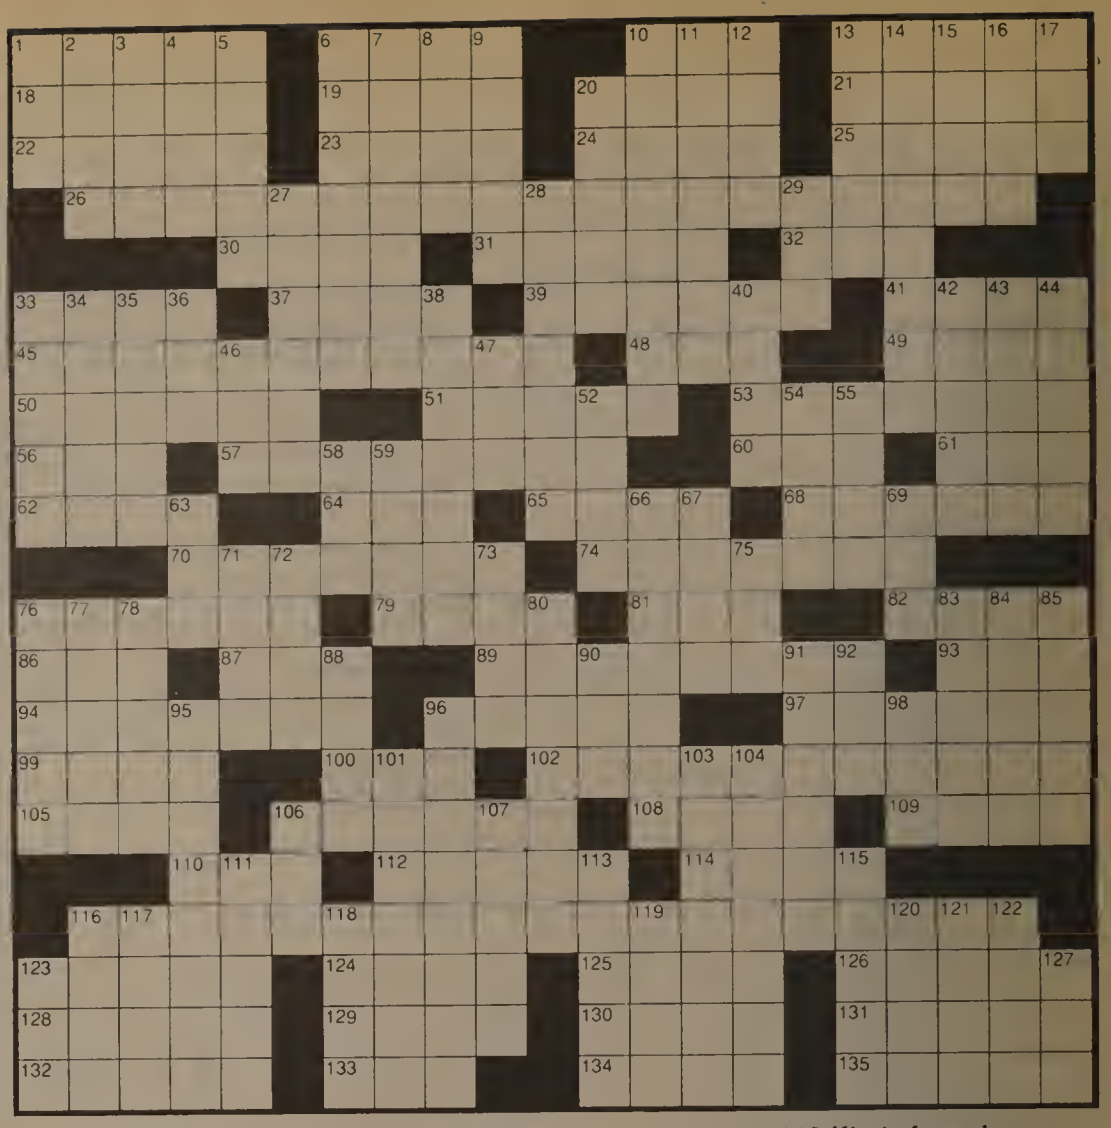
"TIME FOR A CHANGE: THE RETURN OF THE REPUBLICAN PARTY IN MASSACHUSETTS," BY TED FRIER AND LARRY OVERLAN $29.95

BY ERIC PETERSON

If you or anyone on your holiday gift list is suffering from political withdrawal now that the elections are over, ease the pain by picking up a copy of "Time for A Change: The Return of the Republican party in Massachusetts." No, it's not fiction. Written by Ted Frier and Larry Overlan, two former officials in the Republican campaign of 1990, the book details the rise of the party from its comical implosion in the 1986 elections through its landmark victories in 1990. While the book's triumphant tone is tarnished a bit by this year's Democratic gains, it remains a lively and interesting tale of political rebirth.

For a generation prior to 1990, the Republicans had been as popular in Massachusetts as porcupines in a condom factory. The book provides a historical perspective, noting that before Democratic hegemony in the state led to labels like "Taxachusetts" and "The People's Republic of Massachusetts," the state was a Republican stronghold. According to the authors, the Republicans lost control of the state only when they failed to cultivate a strong "farm system" of grassroots organization and local officeholders; instead, they chased high-profile positions.

If Michael Dukakis reminded you of the weenie chairman of the high school yearbook committee who acted like he was smarter than everyone, you'll find plenty of evidence in the book, both anecdotal and statistical, to support your impression. Other prominent Democrats are also skewered, notably Ted Kennedy, who is described as "having a penchant for declaring holy wars against unknown adversaries."



So, in this holiday season, if you're in the mood to read about the holy crusade of the Republican return to power, you'll enjoy "Time For A Change." Especially if you're a Republican. If you're a card-carrying liberal, however, the book is likely to heat you up more than any Yuletide fire ever could. ❑

!MPROPER IMPERSONALS

Feel the urge to unleash your frustrations or vent your hostilities on an unsuspecting friend or enemy? Look no further than the Improper Impersonals, a forum designed for pranksters, irate neighbors, relatives, maniacs or any would-be target of your acid tongue. Best of all they're FREE! Send your Impersonals to us at Improper Impersonals, The Improper Bostonian, 17 Station St., Suite 7A, Brookline, MA 02146. Or fax it to us at 232-4305.

Juls,
Maybe AA isn't the best place to meet men. I need a drink to deal with a guy's pierced nipples.
Skye

Precious,
Rackety, rackety, rackety! Quit it. Thanks for giving me a piece of your pie - I liked the whipped cream the best. Got a minute? I can't get my zipper down.

Baby Back Ribs (Stephanie),
When are you gong to marry me and bear 5 of my beautiful children? Haven't you made me wait long enough?
G.B.

Mr. Latino,
I'll think about your offer, meet me at apartment #12 to further discuss many interesting possibilities.

p.s. There's more to Monday's nights than football.

Mace, the gentleman of the century!
You certainly have a way with the ladies but you better watch out because I am keeping my eyes on you for Norma.
Lynne Z.

Hey Denton?
Where's your car? Alex baby,
Hope you are feeling better . If you need some doctoring, I'll be available any night after 8pm - my place

To Tooth,
The other night was great! Couldn't believe our eyes. We thought it was Elvira; but to our surprise! We limped, we ached, and Rhonda ROCKED YOUR WORLD! Thanks for the lessons. Perhaps we'll try curling irons and Hersheys next week. Rhonda's rite to go!
Rhonda and Sparky

Hehhhver,
Duhhhhhhhhl Relp mree rearn row to bress mryself, Prease.
Duhhhhhhhhl

Trisha,
Thanks for the impersonal last issue. I didn't know you had changed. Call me for a rendezvous on Saturday and I promise to teach you discipline.
Happy to be in Pain,
Martha

Clancy,
Even though I've met someone new to paw around with, I still miss our duel "lick and clean" sessions.
Beauj

Maddy Z,
You tried to destroy me, but it doesn't mean I hate you. In fact I rather like your style. You'd be a fine addition to the ranks of my kind. You can have it all. Just join me for a drink.
The Gray Man

Oak,
It was fun going to the show with you, but tell me. Why did Mom and Dad name me after a pizza?
Ricky Abundanza

Sugar Lips,
Put on the silk blue number I got you, get in bed and wait for me. I'll have more instructions for you when I get home. Get ready to scream.
H-Man

Gowser,
Although it's been said, many times, many ways, Merry Christmas...To Q.
Who loves ya? Sis

Newberry,
We have found you. We know where you live. We are coming for you. Soon.
Beware.
-FLT

Bobbo,
Clients with money and friends with large bankbooks, Faithful bull markets and perfect smooth sales hooks,
Grinches, swim classes, a lesson to sing
These are a few of your favorite things.
Thanks Batman. Where's my present?
Vicky Vale

Michel,
I long to squeeze your poontsies.
Genevieve

Giftus and Beau
I understand if you guys don't get me a Christmas present this year, considering that every cent you own is now Mortgage Money. Give my regards to Auburn! (And I guess your sex life as well) Love you guys.
Olive Clark

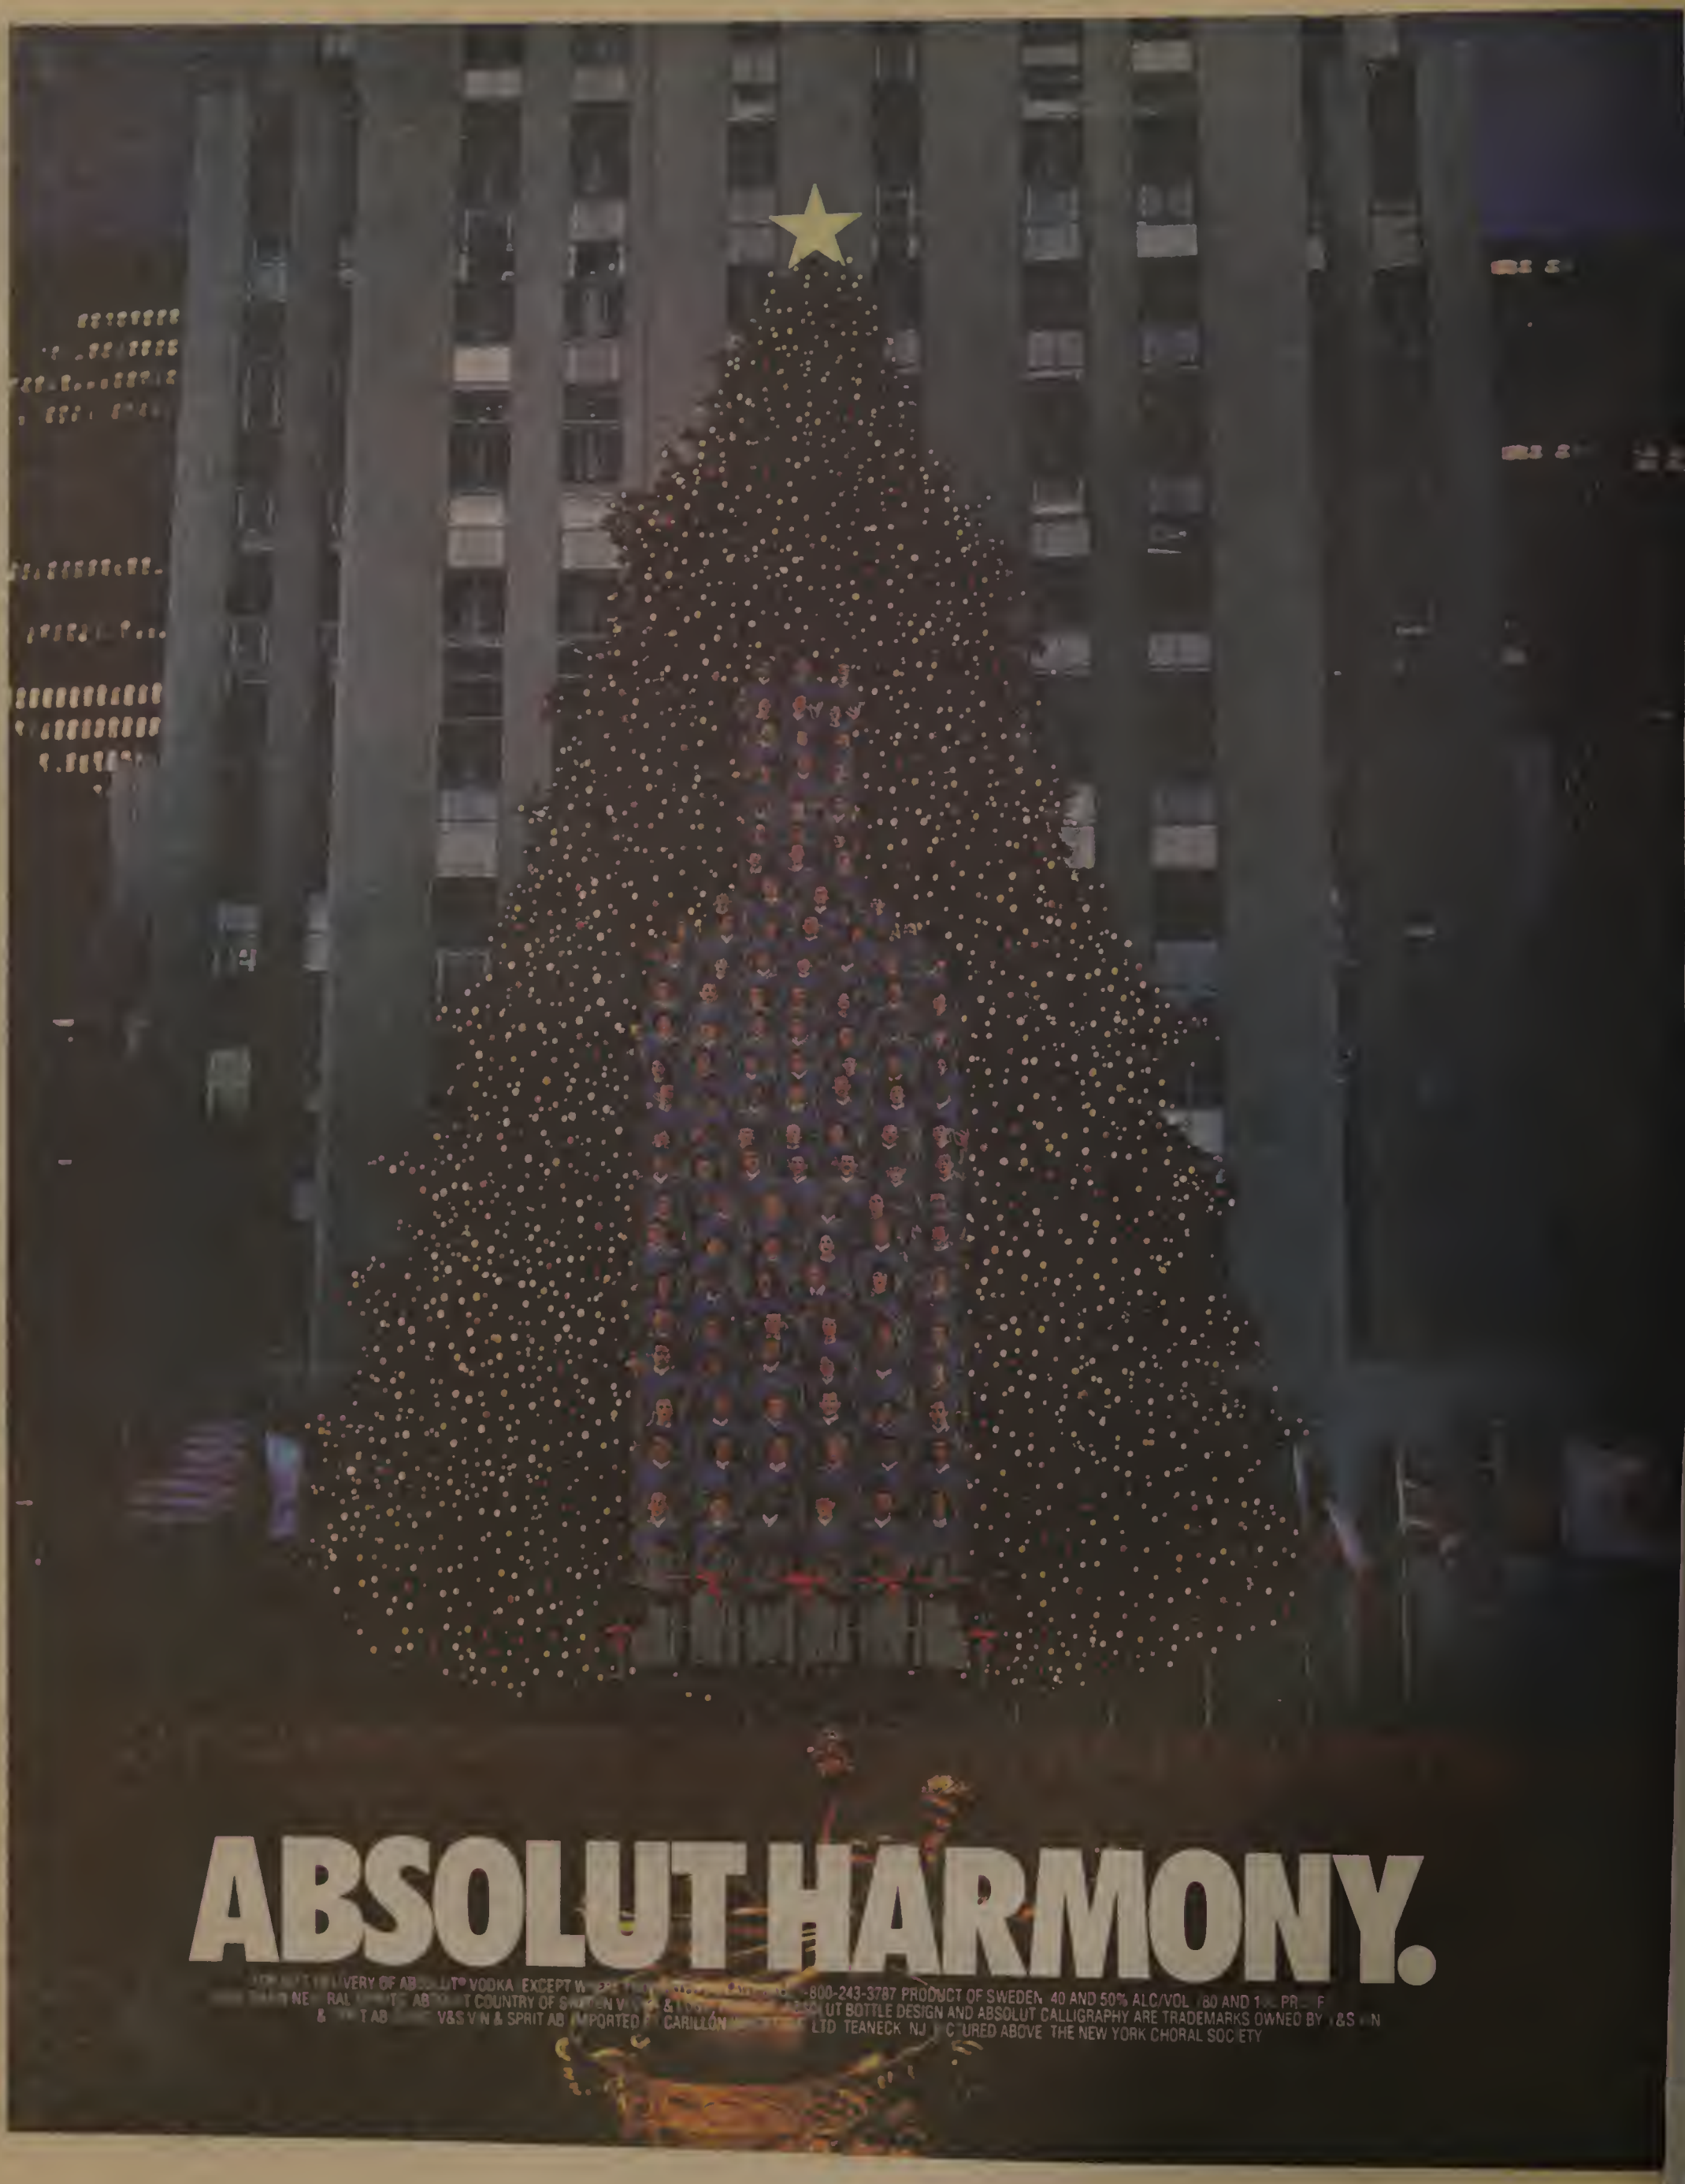
WHEN'S HORNFEST 3????

Bones
My, how quickly we age. It's okay. A little more lard around the waist, a little more grey in the pubes and a lot more Ben and Jerry's flavors to choose from. Where's my quote??
Triath.

Devilbunnies,
Here's a place that you can flame all of your enemies in print and for free. I'm sure you can come up with some creative ones.
Double

La Grande Fromage:
Where's my little screw?
Missing my screw in Timbukto.

Melch,
You have passed the point of help. It's X-Mastime, so do us a favor and return her lunchbox and dolls to the school, and I promise not to report you to the authorities.
–Concerned for our childrenSarita,



I hear there's an opening at Blikem, Cheatem and Howe. Or maybe you could try Deckem, Hertem and Robbim? Either will work fine. Richard: Sell, already! I want to live off you guys. Kisses and hugs. Don't forget to lock up, now.
Snoozanne

Kirsten,
Why do you keep ignoring me? This is your last chance. Meet me at BHP or our correspondence will cease. Call me!!!
P.
P.S. Was it Buzzy's that turned you off?

To the Dogwalking Vigilante,
Stop following me around, you jerk. Next time I'll bring my Doberman. Then we'll see who owns the neighborhood.
Crowbar

Cookie:
You never send me flowers any more. You never call. You dont even write. And after all the quality time we spent together. I guess I'll just have to kill you, slowly. Perhaps I'll truss you to a spit. Then watch as the fleas eat your bowels. And giggle.

Lou:
It was four months last Friday. I am, once again, mobile. Soon it will be over for me. But you owe me—money, time, and freedom. I hope you feel like shit about yourself. You deserve it.
